

GOSSIP AND NEWS OF DEAR OLD LONDON

"Old Maid" Princess Celebrates Birthday—Prince Billy Does Likewise

Guard Special Service.

London, July 10.—Princess Victoria Alexandra Olga Mary, the "old maid" daughter of King Edward, on Tuesday celebrated her forty-first birthday. The occasion has brought forth the usual rumors as to the cause of the unmarried condition of the princess, and there are many who believe the allegation that an early unfortunate love affair is responsible for her determination to live and die a spinster. The rumor is to the effect that Victoria, while still in her teens, fell in love with a young man much beneath her station. As the cast iron rules of royal etiquette forbade a marriage, the heartbroken princess resolved never more to heed the wooings of acceptable suitors. This story is apocryphal, and probably contains little of truth. Certain it is, however, that the princess has refused many suitors of royalty who have sought to win her hand and heart.

Princess Victoria was born at Marlborough house July 6, 1868. She is a year and four months older than her sister, Queen Mary, of Norway, who has been married nearly thirteen years. Should Princess Victoria marry she would receive by grant of parliament a much larger amount from the king's civil list than she now receives, but this prospect apparently possesses no allurements for her royal highness.

"Prince Billy" is Three
Another royal birthday which has attracted much attention was that of Prince William, eldest son of the German crown prince, who on Sunday attained the mature age of three years. "Prince Billy," as he is popularly called, will some day be emperor of Germany, if he survives his father and grandfather and the Social Democratic revolution now brewing in Germany.

The little prince made his first appearance before the public recently in a somewhat unconventional manner. He stole out of the nursery to a vacant room on the front of the crown prince's palace overlooking the famous boulevard Unter den Linden, climbed upon a chair and gazed curiously upon the multitudes of people passing to and fro. The throngs in the street soon caught sight of the little fellow, and stopped to watch him and to cheer.

Finding that he had centred upon himself the earnest attention of his future subjects the baby prince, a fine, sturdy fellow, rendered them military honors in true Hohenzollern style.

Elitel to Celebrate
Prince Eitel Frederick, second son of the German emperor, will celebrate his twenty-sixth birthday tomorrow. He was born July 7, 1883. In accordance with custom in the Prussian royal house he was made a lieutenant of the First Regiment of Foot Guards at the age of 10 years. He received his military instruction in that regiment until his eighteenth year, when he went to the university at Bonn to complete his studies in company with his older brother, the crown prince. On February 26, 1906, Prince Eitel Frederick was married.

EDITH MAY THOMPSON WOODILL, VICTIM IN STRANGE MURDER

The murder of Mrs. Edith May Thompson Woodill by Robert Eastman, a fugitive New York broker, near St. Michaels, Md., was one of the oddest crimes of the decade. The authorities have not yet decided what prompted Eastman, who killed himself when surrounded by a posse, to murder the young woman. Some strange mystery is believed to be behind the tragedy. Mrs. Woodill's life itself was fraught with mystery. In infancy she was adopted by Colonel Thompson in Minneapolis. She became a protégée of Lyman J. Gage, former secretary of the treasury, and he defrayed much of the expense of her education. She was popular in society in Washington and New York and had been married only a short time when the tragedy occurred.

to the Duchess Sophia Charlotte of Oldenburg, daughter of the reigning grand duke of Oldenburg. Prince Eitel has traveled extensively in various parts of the world and is the tallest and most powerfully built of the emperor's six sons.

Prince on Trial
London is vastly interested in the retrial of Prince Philipp zu Eulenberg on the trial of perjury, which grew out of the Harden-Von Moltke affair. The prince was brought before the bar yesterday and it is reported here that his annual net income of six per cent interest on a valuation of thirty dollars an acre. When modern irrigation is scientifically applied, five, ten, twenty and forty acre intensively cultivated farms will become the rule in this valley instead of your present 160, 320 and 640 acre partially cultivated farms that new witnesses have been secured who will give important and sensational evidence.

In an editorial in his journal Harden says the time has come for an Anglo-German pact, whereby Germany will permit England to seize the Congo Free State and any other distant territory she desires, and will recognize England's mastery of the seas throughout the world. In return for this England is to recognize Germany's predominance in Europe and her needs in any other European country she may desire and extend her frontiers in any direction she chooses.

Unless some such agreement is reached, Harden says, war is the only alternative. He says it is absolutely impossible for the two nations admitted the most powerful in Europe to continue their present rivalry. Unless England and Germany can work in harmony in the future, Harden says one or the other must be crushed.

New Irish Journal
Sinn Fein, a daily newspaper organ of the Sinn Fein "Irish for the Irish" movement, is announced to make its first appearance in Dublin this week, and the arrival of the first copies of the new journal in government circles here. Arthur Griffiths, a well known Irish journalist, is the editor of the new paper.

One of the strong points of the new paper will be that its foreign news will be gathered by its own correspondents in all parts of the world. It long has been a cause of complaint among Irishmen that the foreign news published by the Irish papers reaches them from English sources, and inevitably is colored to suit the purposes of the British government. Sinn Fein promises to throw interesting light on European statesmanship and diplomacy in relation to Ireland and its aspirations.

Open Harvard House
Historic Harvard House at Stratford-on-Avon, which recently became the property of Harvard University through its purchase by Edward Morris, the millionaire beef packer of Chicago, was opened to visitors this week. Many Americans inspected the house Sunday and Monday, and another large party will go out today.

Harvard House once belonged to the mother of John Harvard, the Englishman who went to America as a boy and by his will provided for the founding of the great university, the Oxford of the new world.
Miss Marie Correll, the novelist, was largely responsible for the acquisition of the historic dwelling place. She had often noticed it getting more worn and decayed, but no chance of doing anything for it occurred until the owner suddenly died. It was put up at auction, but was withdrawn at $5000. Miss Correll then set about going to find a private purchaser. She was on board Sir Thomas Lipton's boat last summer when she met Edward Morris, to whom she submitted the idea. Mr. Morris and his wife entered into the scheme with eagerness, and generous help. Miss Correll with the money, but to say not only to buy the house, but to restore it to its original appearance as far as possible. This has now been done, and there is consequently a little piece of the United States set down in the centre of Eng-

NORTHWEST WHEAT YIELD IS LARGE

Will Very Nearly Approach Record—Some Crop Estimates

Estimates compiled from data received from more than 350 of the principal wheat stations of Oregon, Washington and Idaho, indicate the 1909 wheat yield for the three states to be approximately 55,000,000 bushels, compared with 48,000,000 bushels last year, 60,000,000 bushels in 1907, and a five year average of 48,500,000.

These figures are, of course, susceptible to some change in case of wet weather damage at harvest, but with cutting already begun south of Snake River, and plenty of moisture to carry the spring wheat along to maturity, there is only a slight chance for much deterioration. Practically all of these reports, which were gathered by special correspondents of the Oregonian, by railroad agents and by representatives of the warehouse and adding interests, cover the situation to July 8th.

Rain Worth Millions.
The reports are all enthusiastic regarding the great benefits from the recent rains, some of the railroad men estimating the increase in yield directly traceable to the rains, as high as 3,000,000 bushels, while the most conservative credit the last rain with adding more than 1,000,000 bushels to the crop.

Of the three states Idaho has the best crop with Washington showing up exceedingly well, while Oregon, especially in the river counties, suffered from dry weather to such an extent that the damage could not all be repaired by the late rains.
