STILL WORKING ON ELKS' BUILDING DEAL

Money Is Almost Subscribed and Work Expected to Begin in a Short Time

Work is expected to begin on the six-story brick store and office building to be erected by Eugene Lodge B. P. O. Elks, at the corner of West Seventh and Olive streets, within the next few weeks. It has been practically decided to build only the basement this year, as previously predicted by The Guard, as the rainy weather would find the building unenclosed if an attempt was made to go ahead with the entire structure this year.

The money for the erection of the skyscraper has almost all been raised and the committee hopes to complete the fund in another month. That the building will not be lower than six stories has been definitely decided by the committee in charge.

PRESBYTERIANS AGAIN BEATEN BY BAPTIST BALL TOSSERS

The Baptist baseball team again defeated the Presbyterians last evening by the score of 16 to 3. Quite a crowd of enthusiastic fans attended the game, which was interesting despite the one-sided score. There was lots of fun and some excitement. The Baptists claim their opponents did not use enough water to get up steam, hence their defeat. The batteries were: Baptists—E. Pickard and Beebe; Presbyterians, Jay Moore and Reid.

A CASE OF HEDGING.

By GEORGE HERBERT BOHN. (Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.)

When I was studying medicine, one afternoon I was in the dissecting room hurrying to get through with a subject before the building should be closed for the night. An examination was before me the next morning and there would be no opportunity to return to the dissecting room for some time to come. I had finished every member except a foot when time was up, and, stuffing it in a hand bag I used to carry needed articles between the city and the place I lived in the suburbs, I left the room, intending to finish my work at home.

On my way I made one of a game of whist in the smoking car with three strangers. Finishing a rubber just as my station was called, I hastily picked up my bag and left the train. On reaching home I tossed my satchel on a table, made my toilet and went down to dinner. In the evening I went up to my room to go to work. What was my astonishment and chagrin on taking up the bag to discover that it was not mine.

I was in a pickle. Whoever had taken my own satchel on opening it would be horrified to discover a human foot. The fact would be reported to the police, and if the owner could be identified I would be subject to a charge of murder, followed by an effort to get rid of the corpse piecemeal.

The wise thing to have done was to report my loss to the police at once. I thought of this, but before doing so concluded to look into the bag I had taken with a view to discovering the owner. It was locked, and I was obliged to force it.

The only articles in it were burglars' tools.

"Well," I said to myself, "whoever has taken my satchel is not likely to report his find, since by doing so he will incriminate himself. There is no necessity for my giving the subject any further attention."

Were it not for one of those strange coincidences that are continually happening my story would end here. A year after my exchange of satchels my house, or, rather, my father's, was robbed. I followed one of the men downstairs, where they had turned on the lights, and caught him by the collar just as he was going out the front door. He turned and gave me a blow which knocked me down. He made his escape, but during the brief instant I saw his face I recognized my partner at whist on the journey when I had exchanged satchels.

I wondered whether he had recognized me, but it occurred to me that he had not, for the light was at his back.

To my surprise, one day while on a train, a man took a seat beside me, and when I looked at him I recognized my partner at whist and I recognized my partner at whist who had been in the same train as I. My first thought was to summon the conductor and have him telegraph ahead to the police. My second was to turn up my right collar and put my hat down over my eyes so that the burglar would not know me. Then I remembered that he had only seen me once, since when I had grown a beard. Thus reassured, I made a remark to him. He replied, and we entered into conversation.

Now, it occurred to me that should I make a charge of burglary against him I would stand in a vulnerable position. He had been possessed of my subject's foot, and I was uncertain what, if any, use he would make of it to establish a countercharge. I concluded to discover if possible what his intentions might be in this respect. I told him the story of the exchange of satchels as having happened to a friend of mine. He turned and after fixing a sharp glance on me said coolly:

"I see you are the man with whom I played whist and who went off with my satchel."

"And you are the man who robbed a house in M. two years ago and whom I caught by the collar and recognized as he passed out. Suppose I give you away?"

"You'll stand trial on a charge of murder."

"I can easily prove that I was a medical student and was taking the foot home for dissection."

"Not so fast, please. To head you off I learned of a missing man and secured evidence to prove conclusively that a man of your description was seen to murder the person who had disappeared. Then I turned over your satchel with the foot in it to the police."

Suddenly it dawned upon me how foolish I had been not to report the case myself. It would have blocked my opponent's game.

"If you report me," he continued, "persons supposed to be unknown to me will inform the police of your identity with the man whom my witnesses saw you murder. You will be arrested, tried and the best of circumstantial evidence furnished to prove that you had a grudge against him, murdered him and intended to protect yourself in case of discovery by the fact that you were a medical student studying anatomy."

A mental vision of one of those celebrated murder cases of which I would be the central figure and wherein half the people believed in the accused's guilt and the other half in his innocence came up before me.

"My friend," I said, "in the eye of the law should we inform on each other we would both be suspected criminals, which is the next thing to being proved criminal. I am quite sure I would be proved guilty. At any rate, I should be ruined. Go in peace."

'PLYMOUTH-BETHEL'

PEOPLE'S PULPIT

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

Pastor Russell of Brooklyn Tabernacle

The above is a very good portrait of Pastor Russell, who is perhaps the most widely known speaker on the American platform to-day, having spoken in nearly every large American city, as well as in many cities in Europe.

Pastor Russell treats popular themes of vital importance to the thinking Christians of this our day of wonderful enlightenment. He is a stickler on the claim that the whole Bible is the inspired Word of God and has a peculiar facility in presenting Orthodox subjects in an attractive and interesting light. Brooklyn is to be congratulated on its reputation as "The City of Churches" and on its galaxy of pulpits, amongst whom are numbered as of the past, Beecher, Abbott and Talmage.

Pastor Russell's sermons will appear weekly in the Daily and Weekly Guard, probably in the Monday issue of the Daily.
