HIGH SCHOOL DISTRICT FOR WESTERN LANE

The school board of Florence has been considering the matter of organizing a high school district in the west part of Lane county, to include Florence and several other districts in the Siuslaw valley. At present our high school is connected with the graded district, being under the management of the same board of directors. But the law provides for organizing a separate high school district to be controlled by an independent board of directors. The tuition received from the county is about sufficient to pay the wages of the teacher in charge of the department, under the present arrangement, so the only additional expense would be in providing the building and equipment. It would also give the people outside of Florence the right to have a say in conducting the high school, selecting the teacher, and all matters pertaining to its management.—West

ENJOINS WIFE WHO LOCKED HIM IN

Seattle, April 4.—Mrs. Vera Prosser, the beautiful and accomplished daughter of a wealthy Cleveland family, today was enjoined by the superior court from "attacking, beating, or in any way molesting" Reese L. Prosser, agent for a Cleveland automobile company. The order followed the filing of a divorce suit yesterday. Prosser made the unusual request for protection on the ground that Mrs. Prosser had threatened, according to his statement, to kill him if he brought the divorce action. Many alleged indignities are cited in Prosser's petition to the court, and one particular case of humiliation set forth is that his wife locked him in a room of a Seattle hotel in May, 1909, removed his clothes, sold them, and compelled him to remain in his room until the landlord discovered his plight and came to his rescue with garments of his own.

ENGLISH AND SCOTCH BANKING SYSTEMS

The National Monetary Commission Makes Interesting Report

Washington, April 4.—Changes in the fashions and the extension of the week-end holiday have their effect, as well as important financial transactions upon the changes of the banknote circulation of England. This appears with other interesting information in the latest publication of the National Monetary Commission, which will be issued this week. This publication differs from any of the others thus far put forth by the commission in that instead of being a monograph on a single subject, it consists, as its title shows, of "Interludes on the banking and currency systems of England, France, Germany, Scotland and Italy."

In the form of question and answer the salient facts about the banking system of each country are developed with a clearness of detail intelligible to the average reader, while at the same time technically sufficient for the banking expert. Especially interesting is the exhibit regarding the English system. It was stated by the officers of the Bank of England in an interview conducted under the direction of Senator Alrich, chairman of the commission, that there has been a steady decrease of late years in the volume of business conducted in London on Saturdays, and the amount of notes withdrawn from the bank on that day is now, as a general rule, very much less than on the other days of the week. The balance outstanding at the close of the day generally shows, therefore, a material shrinkage.

On Mondays notes are withdrawn in larger quantities than usual in order to replenish tills after the reduction in the amounts held on the previous Saturday, whilst on Fridays, also, the withdrawals are above the average to meet the demands occasioned by weekly payments, such as wages, etc.

The increased total at the close of each quarter is occasioned by withdrawals to meet payments due on the four quarter days, Lady Day, Midsummer, Michaelmas and Christmas.

The large total at the beginning of August—of late years generally the maximum for a year—is due to withdrawals for holiday and harvest purposes, whilst the low figures which usually occur in the middle of February may be attributed to the absence of any holiday demand and to the fact that reaction after Christmas, coupled with the comparative absence of visitors to London, causes the retail trade to be less active than in the second and fourth quarters.

The Bank of England is the banker of the government; is the largest issuer of notes, issuing its notes when required in exchange for gold bullion and paying notes in gold coin; and being the bankers' banker, the weekly returns as to its position form the best possible barometer of the state of trade and credit in the country. The rate of discount announced by the bank of England from time to time serves as a guide to the other banks throughout the country in fixing their rates for loans and deposits.

The Scotch system, with its eight large banks, is essentially a system of concentrated control at the centre and the distribution of credit through branches. The Scotch banks have 1,175 offices or branches, or an average of one for every 4,000 inhabitants and economy in the circulation of gold is obtained by the use of the notes, which, it was declared by Mr. Blyth, general manager of the Union Bank, enabled the banks to dispense with keeping large balances in actual coin at the branches. The managers of the branches are known in Scotland as agents, and have the power to grant advances, but subject to the approval of the head office.
