THE SPHERE OF GENIUS.

The sun was sinking in the west—it seemed to do that stunt, at least; I sometimes think it would be best if it would set once in the east. I'm weary of the changeless scheme on which the solar system runs; the same old moon looks down and beams, the same old stars, the same old suns. I'm in a plaintive mood today; a sheriff's writ is in my hand; I could not make my business pay—I could not run a peanut stand. My heart with deep resentment throbs against this weary world of lies. I wasn't built for trifling jobs—the solar system is my ally. Or I could run the government, which now is run by statesmen daff; I'd make Champ Clark look like one cent, and show some things to old Bill Taft. To manage armies in the field, to deal in crowns and build up thrones, the sceptre of a king to wield—for that my lofty spirit hoves. I'm hampered by this world's fool laws, which make me serve, who would command; and people fear at me because I couldn't run a peanut stand.

—WALT MASON.

VACATION TIME IS NEAR AT HAND.

The small boy's eagerness for the advent of vacation time usually is ascribed to his fervid desire to escape from the routine of studies, to leave the thrall of the schoolroom and to have succumb to the demands of the school bell.

To a certain extent that may be true, but in justice to the youth, and that perhaps includes his little sister, it ought to be known why he seeks such freedom.

Vacation time comes at that period of the year when skies are smiling, when woodlands are green and most inviting, when brooks are singing a siren song and when the desire to be out in the open, breathing freely of the sweet, pure air, is overwhelming.

The boy doesn't stop to analyze the reasons for his desire to get out where the sun can shine on him and where he can roam about accumulating sunburn, stone bruises, much loose real estate and health.

All that he cares about is that he wants to do it. He craves it.

That feeling is much like the spirit, for such it surely can be called, animating the earth in springtime, for it is true that there is

"An instinct within it
That reaches and towers—
And groping blindly above it for light,
Climbs to a soul in grass and flowers."

AN UNHAPPY MAYORESS.

Down in Hunnewell, Kan., is a mayoress who is finding her political career any thing but smooth and unhampered.

It seems that there is strife between the chief executive and the councilmen and that her efforts in the way of appointing various city officials are being blocked.

She is credited with declaring that Hunnewell is in worse condition than ever because she cannot appoint the officers she desires.

The mayoress has only been in office a short time, and yet, during that brief period has discovered that victory doesn't always insure tranquility and that winning a political fight isn't even half the game.

On her ability to affect a compromise with the councilmen will depend much of the success of the rest of her administration.

She says she has heard that one of the councilmen is ashamed of the way he has been acting.

If the councilmen of Hunnewell are "acting up" merely because they want to annoy or make difficult the work of the mayoress, they deserve the severest kind of condemnation.

If they are sincere in their demands or the position they have assumed, they, doubtless, will be diplomatic or honest enough to come to a definite understanding with the city's chief.

The Moffat tunnel bill has passed both houses of the Colorado Legislature, despite strong opposition and just escaping defeat in the lower branches after its amendment in the senate. It must now be submitted to a referendum vote to become effective. The measure provides for the building of the tunnel by the state through the main range of the Rocky Mountains and on its completion its lease to the Moffat road (Denver, Northwestern & Pacific) by which the proposition was originated, but all roads will be entitled to use it that wish to do so for a stipulated consideration. It is believed that the people will ratify the action of the legislature and the tunnel will be built and completed in about five years. Colorado purposes not to wait for railroad capitalists to do a work that means so much for the development of the state.

Says the Daily Astorian:—"Every man in Oregon who votes to abridge the work and efficacy of the University of Oregon will stultify himself and go on record as an enemy of higher education, than which nothing is of deeper value in this age of progress and enlightenment. We have enough to do to contend against the ineradicable ignorance of the hour without choking the foundations from which we must draw the wisdom and culture and capacity for dealing with the new and vexing problems of our advance. To defeat the appropriation for the U. of O. is to tie a stone about our own necks and lapse back to civic impoverishment."

There is hope for the sufferer from insomnia, according to an Englishman who has invented a sleep inducing instrument which he calls a spectascope. The instrument consists of a pair of flat goggles or black concave discs, on which two white spots are so placed as to correspond to the positin of the eyes. All the sleepless one is supposed to do is to sit down in a chair or lie down in bed and look steadily at the two discs, which, of course, become one apparently. According to the inventor, a delightful sense of drowsiness creeps over one which results in a glorious natural sleep. The spectascope is intended to be used in a room lighted either by daylight or a soft night light.

Evidently this man Parkison had an idea that referendum petitions against the University of Oregon, O. A. C. and Monmouth Normal would be worth $10,000 to him. When no one appeared anxious to buy him off his disappointment found vent in baseless and senseless charges against the men who declined to be blackmailed.

Men like H. J. Parkison and Lew Cates naturally oppose education in any form. They have no influence or standing except with the ignorant or radically prejudiced classes

Political News and Notes

Kentucky gubernatorial candidates are launching their campaigns.

It is reported that David Jayne Hill might decide to discuss the entire matter of his resignation after his official connections with the government at Washington shall have been terminated.

The salaries of the members of the Iowa legislature have been increased. Formerly each member received $550 for the legislative term; hereafter, $1000 will be paid the assemblymen.

Congressman Choise B. Randall, of Texas, is a Georgian by birth, but he has lived in Texas long enough to make himself popular with the people who sent him to represent them in the lower house.

Now he seeks promotion in the form of an election to the senate to succeed Joseph W. Bailey.

Leaders on both sides admit that the debate on the Canadian reciprocity in the senate will be almost endless. In many instances the discussions have led to the belief that the tariff is a local issue, because of the desperate efforts of certain senators to protect the products of their own communities.

The contests for the next national conventions soon will be on in earnest, though the actual choice of location will not be made until next spring. It is regarded as a foregone conclusion that one or the other of the big conventions will go to Chicago and political leaders of the Windy city are planning their future movements accordingly.

Under the Crumpacker re-apportionment bill there will be 72 additional delegates to the national convention of 1912. In 1908 there were 289 delegates to the republic-can national convention, and 1006 delegates to the democratic national convention. Not a few of the present members of the democratic national committee declare that the democratic candidate for vice-president next year should come from the southern states, and those who hold this idea will work for delegates to be instructed accordingly.

Congressman Joseph E. Ransdell, who is chairman of the national rivers and harbors congress, has formally announced his candidacy for the United States senate, but has not determined whether he will enter for the term beginning 1913 or 1915. Mr. Ransdell comes from the Fifth Louisiana district. Both of the senatorial vacancies will be filled as the result of primaries to be held in Louisiana next year. Senator Foster comes up for re-election and others in the rare are Governor Sanders, Congressman Pujio and Brogsard, and possibly ex-Governor Blanchard.

It has been pointed out that all but a few of the chairmanships of the important committees of the house of representatives are now held by southern democrats, as follows: Underwood, of Alabama, ways and means; Henry, of Texas, rules; Clayton, Alabama, judiciary; Pujio, Louisiana, banking and currency; Adamson, of Georgia, interstate and foreign commerce; Randall, of Louisiana, rivers and harbors; Alexander, of Missouri, merchant marine; Lamb, of Virginia, agriculture; Padgett, of Tennessee, military affairs; Robinson, of Arkansas, public lands; Burnett, of Alabama, immigration; Jones, of Virginia, insular affairs; Richardson, of Alabama, pensions.
