GOLD HILL MAN TO INVEST HERE

Earl S. S. Smith Convinced Eugene Has a Brilliant Future.

Earl S. S. Smith left this morning for his home at Gold Hill near Medford. He was here with C. C. Newhall of Medford, looking over the country. Mr. Smith contemplates investing in Eugene. He says he came from the east about a year ago and invested in a ranch near Medford. Since that time he has been looking up an down the coast with a view of making further investments and finds Eugene to be the most promising city visited. He likes the push, energy and modern development of the city and believes in its future. "One thing," said Mr. Smith, "which convinced me that Eugene was going to be a big city was a conversation which I recently had with Carl Gray, president of the Oregon Electric Railway company, with whom I was associated while he was superintendent of the St. Louis & San Francisco. I asked him in regard to the company's Siuslaw extension, of which there has been considerable talk, and he told me that it was the company's intention to extend its system to this place and finish its contemplated improvements here before taking up the matter of other extensions. I therefore considered that this must be a good town, and on investigation I found such to be the case."

FALL OPENING OF Y. M. C. A. LAST NIGHT WAS BIG SUCCESS

Athletic Contests Pulled off and Good Musical Program Was Rendered.

The Y. M. C. A. opening last night was a success both in attendance and pleasure. The program opened with a basketball contest, followed by a boxing match of blindfolded contestants. Then there were the stunts followed by a musical program. The basketball game was between the Knights of the Round Table and a picked team. The Knights were McCallum, A. West, Lowry, Church and Wheeler. The picked aggregation was composed of Irish, Davis, R. West, Hill and Ruth. The Knights won by a score of 29 to 8.

In aequatic relay race the following took part: 1st team, D. Vickers, Clubb and Koepke; 2nd team, V. Vickers, Moore and Stanley. The first team won. In the candle race D. Vickers, V. Vickers, Moore and Clubb took part. V. Vickers won with Clubb second and D. Vickers third. A great deal of fun resulted from sport arounds an empty vinegar barrel.

The musical program consisted of a mandolin solo by Jack Dinan, a vocal solo by J. W. Stearns and a vocal solo by E. K. Miller and stories by Prof. Straub. Refreshments of apples and pears were served.

ELECTIONS BEING HELD TODAY IN CANADA

Hot Time in Selection of Members of New Parliament.

FACTS ABOUT CANADIAN ELECTION.

Obstruction by the conservative opposition having made it impossible for the government to bring the reciprocity bill to vote in the house of commons, the eleventh annual Canadian parliament was dissolved, and a general election to choose a new parliament was ordered.

The Liberal party which was in power during the eleventh parliament with Sir Wilfrid Laurier as premier, favors reciprocity with the United States along the lines proposed in the reciprocity bill passed by the United States congress, while the Conservative party opposes.

The campaign was inaugurated immediately following the dissolution of the eleventh parliament, July 29, 1911, and has been waged with such bitterness, the opponents of reciprocity using as their principal argument the declaration that the passage of the bill means the first step toward the annexation of the Dominion to the United States.

To carry reciprocity the Liberal government, headed by Sir Wilfred Laurier must be returned. The Liberal majority in the last parliament was forty-five, and to defeat reciprocity the Conservatives must gain twenty-three seats.

Canadian influences favoring reciprocity: Agricultural interests, western Canada grain growers, low tariff advocates, British free traders, American settlers and all straight-out Liberals.

Influences against reciprocity; Ultra-imperialists, British tariff reformers and their Canadian allies, protected manufacturers and all of the straight-out Conservatives.

Montreal, Sept. 21.—In the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec, the fate of reciprocity between the United States and Canada will be decided today. While the parliamentary election is national and the voters of the entire Dominion will cast their ballots today, both sides concede that this province is a pivotal one.

Not in many years has any election in Canada attracted so much interest as that in progress today, and the vote will undoubtedly break all records. Both sides have waged a valiant fight and the leaders of both parties are today confident of victory.

The Liberals declare that as a result of today's battle of ballots, reciprocity will be ratified by a parliamentary majority of at least thirty-five votes. The Conservatives are equally certain that they will obtain more than the twenty-three seats necessary to defeat the measure.

The campaign of the Conservatives and opponents of reciprocity has been of a violently anti-American character and annexation has been described as the inevitable sequel of reciprocity. It is said in many places President Taft has been alleged to be desirous of rendering his name and fame immortal by adding Canada to the Union during his administration, or at least by laying the foundation on which the structure of annexation may be reared. Even more bitter denunciations have been heaped upon the head of William Randolph Hearst, who in his right for reciprocity has circulated hundreds of thousands of copies of his newspapers in the Dominion.

To keep faith with President Taft, the Laurier government has taken its life in its hand. Reciprocity has been placed ahead of everything in the governmental campaign. If Sir Wilfrid and the Liberals are returned to power, as unprejudiced political wiseacres consider highly probable, parliament will be reassembled, the reciprocity bill passed, and at an agreed date, both the United States and Canada will put the necessary tariff changes into effect.

If the Conservatives win a majority in parliament in today's election, R. L. Bordon, the opposition leader, will become premier, reciprocity will be slain and left dead by the wayside, and Canada will remain a high tariff country desirous of continuing the present tariff relations with her next-door neighbor.

Nearly everybody in Canada, prior to the recent reciprocity campaign favored a change in the tariff with the United States. It was not until reciprocity became a partisan issue that determined opposition developed in Canada. The states of the Elgin treaty, in 1866, and up to the last few years Canada had given up hope of closer trade relations.

President Taft, declaring that such tariff barriers were absurd when erected between neighboring nations with a close community of interests, held out the olive branch. The Laurier government, being in power, had the first chance at making reciprocity an issue of the Liberal party, and there was nothing left for the Conservatives but to be "agin it." The great financial and manufacturing interests provided the opposition with a "barrel," and the fight was on. The British imperialists, fearing that closer relations between Canada and the United States might strain the British connection, also gave aid and succor to the Conservatives.

Mr. Borden, in his many utterances opposing reciprocity, has declared that Canada long ago gave up hope of closer trade relations with her big neighbor and had entered successfully upon its own development within the protective tariff wall. There was a time, he admits, when reciprocity would have aided the development of Canada, but he asserts that that time is past, and that the United States seeks at this late day to bring about reciprocity only for selfish reasons. He honestly believes that a breach in the protective principle in favor of the United States will involve the economic wrecking of Canada and the ultimate severance of the ties with the mother country, England. When Canada wanted reciprocity, he declares, the country was young and unable to offer a home market valuable enough to meet the needs of the agricultural interests.

The Liberals, on the other hand, have persistently declared through the campaign, that a fair policy of reciprocity in natural products, has been the avowed policy of all the Canadian governments, Liberal and Conservative, since confederation, and that its adoption means increased prosperity for the Canadian producer without damaging either the Canadian producer or consumer.
