C.&N. IS NOW SAID TO BE BEHIND THE P.G.W.

Portland Paper Has New Story As to Ownership of the Hunt Road

Now the Hunt road is said to be backed by the Chicago & Northwestern. The Portland Telegram says: The Pacific Great Western, which has the most favorable survey of all projects from Eugene to the coast and down to Coos Bay, is now regarded as a Chicago & Northwestern property. It will be the Pacific coast outlet for this new transcontinental system now forging westward, and will be used by this road in making Coos Bay one of the most important towns on the Pacific coast. The P. G. W. is also to be a link in the east and west line across Oregon to connect with the Pacific, Idaho & Northern (the "Pin" road), and the proposed road across Idaho, which is now being built.

These statements are accepted as trustworthy by some of the best informed railroad men in the Northwest. There have been in Portland and other Oregon cities during the present month railroad men who represent almost every department of the Northwestern system, the location, engineering, construction, operating, legal, fiscal and executive. Several of them are in the city now, and others will be here within a few days, all of them keeping their movements as guarded as possible.

It was first suspected that the Pacific Great Western Railway, which has already let contracts for construction through Lane county, and which is now fighting the Southern Pacific for certain rights along the Siuslaw, was a Hill project, but this has been officially denied and in such a way as leaves no doubt as to the truth of the denial. When the new and mysterious project appeared in the role of actual builder of a line from Eugene to the coast, the Harriman people characterized the new road as a bluff, and a "promotion" scheme, just as happened when Hill paralleled the O. R. & N. with the Oregon Trunk into Central Oregon.

But the best posted railroad men declare that the Harriman interests had no intention of building into Coos Bay via the Eugene-Florence route until they discovered that their strong rival, the Northwestern, was getting into their persimmon grove. The same is true of the startling activity of the Oregon Short Line and the Oregon Eastern in driving a line through Malheur canyon across the state. There is every reason to believe that when the real motive for this burst of speed is revealed it will show that the Northwestern will be running its grade and laying rails for a new line across the same strategic course. It is a noteworthy fact, to which the attention of local railroad experts has been called, that the only places where the Harriman interests are showing any activity at the present time are in the zones where the Chicago & Northwestern has been detected as being active. This applies to Eastern and Southern Idaho, Eastern Oregon, and is now developing in the western portion of this state.

A STUDY IN BROWN

TAILORED GOWN AND CHINCILLA SET

This oddly cut tailored gown gives one a good idea of the way buttons are being used. These are silk covered ball buttons, matching the dark brown of the dress. The skirt is slashed, and the coat has a novel arrangement of the revers, that on the left wing being very wide and shaped to the figure by means of narrow tucks. With the gown is worn a brown velvet turban trimmed with a band of tawny Australian chinchilla. The collar and pillow muff are also of chinchilla.
