GOING ON TRIAL
The great criminal lawyer was speaking a final word to his client before putting her on the witness stand. "Can you cry quietly without sniffing?" "Oh, yes, sir." "Then shed a few tears as you go along. Not a downpour, you understand, but enough to require the furtive use of your handkerchief." "Yes, sir." "And occasionally when your eyes are full of tears—by the way, you have lovely eyes—turn them on the jury. It wouldn't be amiss if you occasionally turned them on the judge. You will obey my instructions implicitly?" "Certainly." "Good! Answer the questions I told you to answer and leave the rest to me."
