

SPEEDING MUST STOP SAYS SHERIFF ELKINS

County Court Accedes Request for Pay for Special Traffic Officer to Assist.

For some weeks Sheriff D. A. Elkins has been suggesting to the county court the need of a special officer to regulate traffic speed on the roads, especially the Pacific highway and up the McKenzie, where many parties of tourists go. Many of these men, with heavy cars, not only endanger life with their speed, but drive the farmers off the road and up alongside the fences, and also tear up the road.

A car driving over a road at 40 miles an hour will do a road much more damage and wear it out much more than the same car when driven within the legal rate of 25 miles per hour.

The court has acceded to his request that a salary be provided for a special officer, and one will be put on at once. He will be mounted on a motorcycle and will arrest anyone and everyone found exceeding the legal limits of speed, which is 25 miles an hour, under the state law. This law applies to cities and towns except that they can, and in most towns of the state have, put in force ordinances providing for a much lower rate. The limit in Eugene is 16 miles an hour.

SEVEN ROADS ARE ORDERED BY COURT

Monthly Road Orders Include Several Vacations of Existing Highways.

The county court on Wednesday completed the monthly task of acting on road petitions. In addition to the action already reported in The Guard, several roads were established and others were vacated. Several were also continued. The roads acted upon at the June road sessions are as follows:

- Clabe Godard road; established if district attorney approves; county to pay damages.
- Will Gimpl road; continued.
- N. Schorenberg road; continued.
- J. H. Chambers road; vacated.
- Roy Hutchins road; vacated.
- John S. Beals road; vacated.
- Grant Hendricks road; read first and second time and continued.
- Vacation of road No. 740; ordered vacated.
- George Deffenbacher road; killed by adverse report of viewers.
- Charles E. Craig road; established according to report of viewers.
- Andrew Tungs road; established according to report of viewers; county to pay $180 damages.

used to progress slightly on the west and hold the Germans in the center, while the enemy made further progress on the east, it was indicated by last night's official statements.

The French war office reported further progress in the region of Bally Wood and St. Maurice with the capture of four hundred additional prisoners and a quantity of material. There was no change on the front from St. Maurice to Antheuil.

Official admission of retreat from the sharp Noyon salient was made in the Paris communique. The French line was voluntarily withdrawn on Monday to the line of Bally and Tracy-Le-Val, joining the Marne battle front west of Noyon.

Resolution Urging New Trial for Mooney to be Considered

St. Paul, Minn., June 13.—Resolutions requesting a new trial for Thomas J. Mooney, convicted of murder in connection with a bomb explosion during a preparedness parade in San Francisco, were brought before the American Federation of Labor convention here today.

Other resolutions considered today urged the government to aid in establishing an independent Bohemia and endorsed a proposed trip to Italy by President Samuel Gompers to explain America's war aims to workers there.

Recognizing the increased demand for women workers, the federation expected late today to discuss plans for unionizing them. A union of women stenographers and bookkeepers probably will be the first step in this direction.

Addressing St. Paul business men last night, Gompers told them business has an equal right with labor to organize.

AUSTRIA AGAIN FACED BY CRISIS, NEUTRALS HEAR

in Vindisch-Gratz. There are the most serious disturbances at Leibach. The Bohemians are demanding complete independence. The Austrian socialists are talking strong language, but there is no hope of peace. Germany refuses to listen to democratic peace.

"The reichsrath is strangled with fear because of the demands of the people for strong action against war profiteers, the agrarians (land holders) and capitalists, and a fair division of the coming harvest. But above all the reichsrath fears its own debates of war, peace and political events, and the connection between the letter from the emperor to Prince Sixtus with the retirement of Foreign Minister Czernin.

"It is only with the shadows of reform that the government seeks to conciliate the starving and suffering population of Bohemia. Simultaneously, however, new repressive measures have been introduced in the southern Slav provinces, as a concession to the German nationalists. The latter are carrying out the instructions and policy of the pan-Germans, which demand continuation of the war.

"Austria is again in the clutches of Germany, due in no small measure to the traitorous attitude of the followers of Philip Scheidemann (leader of the German majority socialists) who refuse to support the revolutionary movement in Austria.

"Likewise to demagogic recklessness of the Bolsheviks, who concluded a separate peace at the moment of the greatest upheaval in Austria, strengthened Austro-German imperialism and surrendered the democratic elements into the hands of the military camarilla.

"The situation is not bright, but the desperation of the population is so great that the most serious consequences can be expected."

A STORY OF MARRIED LIFE REVELATIONS OF A WIFE.

By Adele Garrison.

The Startling News that Her Father's Letter Bore to Madge.

Don't look like that," Lillian commanded sharply when the door of the living room closed behind me, shutting off the rest of the dinner guests. "Your father's all right, yet."

Her quick intuition had divined the fact that I realized the special delivery registered letter she had received during her dinner to Robert Savarin was from my father in South America. It was like her, also, to calm my fears as quickly as possible, and at the same time to tell the truth. "Sit down," she said, "and read the letter. There isn't any use now for you to remain in ignorance of your father's address. You'll have to be strictly on the job from now on.

"But, remember," she lifted an admonishing finger, "you mustn't let your face betray you when you go back into the room. There's something out of the ordinary about this affair of your father's; something I don't understand at all, and the fewer people know about it the better.

"Of course, you'll have to show the letter to Dicky, but let me talk to him first. I think I can frighten him into keeping his usually garrulous tongue between his teeth. I wouldn't have shown you the letter until after the other guests had gone home, but I saw you were in an agony of uneasiness about it."

"I couldn't have waited," I answered simply, and the words came through lips that were stiff. Then I took the letter and read it through.

The heading was that of an unpronounceable Spanish town in a country which I knew from my newspaper and magazine reading was giving our own government no little trouble on account of its covert enmity. And the handwriting, unlike the usual, beautiful firm cursive of my father, was irregular, as if the hand that penned it had trembled as it wrote.

"Some Grave Danger,"

"My darling daughter," the letter began.

"I have hesitated a long time before writing this letter, for I did not wish to alarm you. But things have come to such a pass with me lately that I see I shall have to take precautions or else I shall become one of the great army whose fate is marked 'unknown.'

"You must be brave, my dear one, when I tell you that I believe I am in such grave danger it is most uncertain whether I shall ever see you again or not. I have worked for many years down here, and have had many escapes, but never before have I felt the sinister menace that seems to surround me. It is a new influence, too, one that I believe to be directed against myself personally, instead of against my work. I feel its invisible meshes slowly closing around me and in the averted faces and altered demeanor of the native officials who have been associated with me so long I read a distrust that can only have its roots in some underground, personally-conducted campaign against me. In plainer words, I believe these native associates of mine are being made to believe that I am a traitor to them, and if they finally make up their minds to that fact, my passing will be inevitable. I shall simply disappear, and you will never know what has become of me.

"With this possibility staring me in the face, there are things that I must have done quickly. One of these is the disposition of what small fortune I possess, and I have already sent to my lawyers an absolute deed of gift to you of everything I own. Then you won't have to wait for absolute proof of my death to use your money.

Nothing Dishonorable.

"The other task I have in hand is more difficult. I have never told you in exactly what work I am engaged, because it is work which had to be shrouded in secrecy. I am not boasting when I say that things hang upon the success or failure of my work here which would astound and overwhelm you if you knew of them. But one thing I wish to say to you now, something which I have divined your delicate sense of honor would prize.

"My child, there is nothing in the least dishonorable about the work in which your father has been engaged all his life. If you knew all about it, I think perhaps you might be proud of him."

My eyes were so blinded with tears of thankfulness that I could not read further without drying them.

"Thank heaven," I murmured. "Oh, thank heaven."
