

TWO POUND LIMIT IS PUT ON SUGAR SALES

City Families Only Allowed That Amount Because of Loss of Shiploads at Sea.

The amount of sugar which can be sold to any private family except for canning purposes is limited to two pounds to those living in the city and five pounds to those living in the country, according to orders received in Eugene today. The local food administration office has issued the following to the newspapers for publication:

"The United States food administration office at Eugene is in receipt of a telephone message from Mr. W. B. Ayer, federal food administrator for Oregon, that he received a telegram from Washington, D. C., yesterday, instructing him to advise all food administrators in the state of Oregon that the dealers are to sell but two pounds of sugar to a family instead of $1 worth, as has been the regulation heretofore. For people living in the country districts, they will be entitled to purchase five pounds.

"The regulation as to sugar for canning remains the same as heretofore, allowing those who desire sugar for canning purposes to purchase 100 pounds, with this difference—the dealer should make inquiry from the party making purchase of sugar as to the correctness of statement made by the purchaser. If the dealer is assured that not over 40 pounds or 60 pounds will be used by the purchaser for canning purposes, then that is all that the dealer is allowed to sell.

"This order was brought about on account of a number of vessels being sunk off the Atlantic coast which were loaded with sugar.

"This order is imperative, direct from the government at Washington, and must be strictly adhered to, and is effective at once.

Seattle Takes Trade from Port of San Francisco

San Francisco, Cal., June 14.—Seattle last year was the port of entry into the United States of 250,000,000 pounds of coconut oil, soy bean oil and other vegetable oils from the orient, which would have passed through San Francisco had there been proper facilities, according to testimony before a chamber of commerce committee on harbor surveys.

It was claimed that Seattle offered tank facilities for handling this trade, while San Francisco was without such accommodation. The importers, according to witnesses, considered San Francisco the logical entry port if it had proper facilities.

HUN DRIVE IS ENTIRELY CHECKED

German reached the French position, the French war office reported.

Between the Aisne and the Villers-Cotterets forest the Germans gained slightly at some points, but their attacks died down at night.

The greater portion of the battlefront between the Oise and the Aisne was "calm," according to the Paris night communiqué. There was spirited artillery fighting on the eastern portion of the Marne front near Champlatt and Rheims.

The German war office announced that "repeated enemy attacks northwest of Chateau-Thierry (where Americans are engaged) broke down with heavy losses."

The French counter-attack which threw the Germans back across the Marne, was declared by Berlin to have "broken down with the heaviest losses." The enemy claimed a total of 15,000 prisoners in the new drive, with 150 captured cannon.

GENERAL HAIG REPORTS

London, June 14.—Raiding operations and artillery fire were reported by Field Marshal Haig today.

"A strong enemy party was completely repulsed southwest of Morris early this morning and a few prisoners were taken," the statement said.

"Our raids were successful in the neighborhood of Neuville-Vitasse, Civenchy and La Bassee.

"Several prisoners and two machine guns were taken in advantageous patrol encounters southwest of Cavrelle and northwest of Merville.

"There was hostile artillery firing in the Millers-Bretonneux sector and the Scarpe valley."

HOW SHE BANISHES BACKACHE

Mrs. Effie E. Kleppe, Averill, Minn., writes: "I was at a sanitarium three weeks at one time, two weeks another time, for rheumatism and kidney trouble and got no relief. On my return home I began using Foley Kidney Pills and found immediate relief; a half bottle completed the cure." This is further proof that these wonderful pills give relief where other treatments fail. Unequaled for weak, sore, aching kidneys; bladder, back, muscles or joints. Sold everywhere.

A STORY OF MARRIED LIFE REVELATIONS OF A WIFE.

By Adèle Garrison.

New Lillian Disclosed Name the Little Envelope Bore.

Lillian laid her hand upon my shoulder as I put down my father's letter in order to wipe away the thankful tears his words had given me. The touch steadied, reassured me, and I took up the letter again, strengthened as much by her sympathy as I had been by the pledge my father had given me that there was nothing dishonorable in the mysterious work in which he had been engaged so long.

"There is but one thing you can do for me, my daughter," the letter went on, "and that thing I must lay on your conscience as a sacred trust. No matter what happens to me, the work I am carrying on here must not stop. I may be able to extricate myself from the toils that now surround me. I have gotten out of many tight places before, but if I cannot and I see that things are hopeless, I will send you a cable with these words, 'Send country place immediately.'"

"You will then go to the man whose name and address are on the sealed envelope I am enclosing with this, and give the envelope to him. The message within is in a code which but four men in the country know, so that it is no disclosure to you to seal it. Remember, this is only to be given to him if I cable you, or if you have reasonable proof of my death. Under any other circumstances forget that you have it. Indeed, it is my wish that Mrs. Underwood take it and place it in her own personal safety deposit vault. I cannot tell to what search any property of yours might be subjected were it known that you are my daughter."

"What Do You Mean?"

"And now, my darling, I must write no more. I pray that my fears are exaggerated, that I may realize the dearest wish of my heart to spend the last days of my life near you. But if it is my fate to lay my life down in this foreign country, remember that your unhappy father has repented in bitter pain for the wrong he did your mother and you, and that his love for you is something that defies death itself.

"Think of me as tenderly and forgivingly as you can.

"Your loving father,

"ROBERT GORDON."

The tears came again at this cry from my father's heart, but Lillian stopped them by saying rather abruptly:

"You have no time for tears, Madge. There's work for us to do. Let's have a look at the letter he enclosed."

The tiny package which had dropped into my lap as I opened the letter was wrapped in strong linen paper, and bore my own name and address. Inside this wrapping was one of oiled paper and inside that a tiny sealed envelope. But when I took up the envelope to see the address upon it my eyes met a perfectly blank space. There was absolutely no sign of a name or address upon it.

"Oh, Lillian, what does this mean?" I asked. "My father must have forgotten to address this envelope. It's blank!"

"It can't be," Lillian's tone was peremptory, impatient and she almost snatched the envelope from me. Then she examined it from every angle, turning it over and over in her hands.

"He can't have forgotten it," she said at last. "Men of affairs like your father don't forget things of importance like this."

She sat silent for a minute, then sprang to her feet with an exclamation of impatience.

"What an absolute dolt I am," she said. "Invisible ink, of course."

"Invisible ink?" I repeated dully, my slower brain refusing to grasp what her swifter one had seized.

"Yes. You see, he didn't wish this to fall into the hands of anyone else, so he wrote it in invisible ink, so that if the letter to you were lost, the inside letter would mean nothing to the person finding the outside one. He counted on our ingenuity to discover it."

"On yours, you mean," I said.

"Don't talk nonsense," she retorted. "But I'm just beginning to realize how clever your father is. One time when we happened to be alone, the conversation turned on invisible inks. I realize now that he must himself have guided it to that subject. He said half playfully, half impressively:

"If you'll promise never to reveal it to any one, I'll tell you how to make invisible the most difficult preparation of all, one of which few people in the world know the secret."

"Of course I promised, and he told me the formula, repeating it, and making me repeat it, until it was securely fixed in my memory. He cautioned me not to write it down, and said carefully:

"The knowledge might be useful to you some day."

"I see now that he deliberately did it with this contingency in view. I am proud to think he trusted my discretion so much. Fortunately I have the materials at hand—bought them not long ago."

She went to her dressing table and took a small package from it. Then she took the letter and turned her back to me.

"I'm going to fulfill the letter of my promise," she said. "I shan't let even you see me do this."

A moment later a little exclamation broke from her. She wheeled and extended the envelope toward me.

"What do you know about that?" she demanded.

The envelope bore the name of Herbert Drake.

Mob of Dutch Fishermen Attack German Aviator

Muiden, Holland, June 14.—A mob of Dutch fishermen attacked a hotel in which German airmen are interned, as the result of a submarine shelling the lifeboats of a Dutch lugger, which was sunk without warning Sunday. The Huns were saved by the police.

"While we were fishing Sunday a German submarine appeared and shelled us without warning," declared the captain of the lugger Helena.

"The firing was kept up while we were lowering the boats and rowing away. A shell killed three of the crew and stove a big hole in a boat. We plugged the hole with clothing and kept it afloat. The submarine paid no attention to our plight."

The sailors made land after rowing for twelve hours. The sight of the bodies aroused the indignation of the fishermen, who tried to lynch the interned airmen in retaliation.

Ford Regarded Sure Winner as Candidate for Senator

Detroit, Mich., June 14.—Henry Ford's announcement for the United States senatorship in Washington last night came as a big surprise to his associates here. While politicians have been after Ford for some weeks past to get into the senatorial race, it was thought he would continue to remain away from politics.

Ford's decision was the result of the action of the democratic state conference in Lansing Wednesday in extending his name to the republicans as a candidate upon whom to combine. Judge W. F. Connolly, who headed the movement, had just returned from Washington, and it is believed it was made at the request of government leaders. While republicans have taken no action on the democratic offer, Ford is regarded as a sure winner.
