PIONEER FISHERMAN HAS WHIPPED RIVER FOR OVER 50 YEARS

J. H. McClung, of Portland, Oregon pioneer, left Eugene Friday for McKenzie bridge, on his annual fishing trip. His record as a fisherman is probably unequalled by any other citizen of the state. He first fished in the McKenzie in 1865, and he has been visiting the river nearly every summer since. He stated that in the 58 years there were but three, or possibly four, when he had not taken his McKenzie trip.

Mr. McClung is the last man living of a party of seven who were the first white men to visit the tributaries of the McKenzie heading in the Sisters. The other members of the party who made the trip up the McKenzie in 1860 were business men in the town of Eugene, which had at that time a population of about 500. The business interests of the village were pretty generally represented in the excursion. The personnel of the party was as follows:

A. S. Patterson, clerk in the store of J. L. Brumley.
 A. J. Welch, clerk for Goldsmith & Blanding, occupying a building on the present site of the Cockerline and Wetherbee business block.
 C. H. Moses, jeweler.

A. Renfrew, proprietor of the hotel which stood on present location of the Hoffman House.

Joe Stevenson, who conducted a butcher shop at site of present Friendly building.

Joel Ware, printer, employed on the People's Press.

J. H. McClung, druggist.

Mr. McClung stated today at that time there were no white settlers on the river above Walterville. The party made its way over an Indian trail. The trip was without incident until a point near McKenzie bridge, known at that time as Big Prairie, was reached. The members of the party were surprised to hear a great amount of shooting. Presently they came upon a camp of Indians, whose chief came to meet them holding out a paper for them to read. It said, "These are good Indians," and was signed by the superintendent of the Warm Springs reservation on the Deschutes. The Indians made the trip into the mountains every summer to get their year's supply of meat.

Mr. McClung and Mr. Moses, after reaching the Sisters, spent a day exploring a glacier.

Mr. McClung stated that he did not know that trout were more plentiful than they are today, and quoted "Uncle" George Frissell to the effect that there are just as many fish as there ever were, but they are harder to catch. He stated that in 1890, before the days of the artificial fly, grasshoppers were used for bait. During his more than 50 years' fishing, 75 trout was his best day's catch.

Mr. McClung is 81 years of age. He moved from Eugene, where he had been a resident since June 2, 1856, to Portland, about 13 years ago.

Amended Report in Woodcock Case Is Denied by Court

Probate Judge Harry Bown today denied the admission of an amended report in the case of the A. C. Woodcock as administrator for the estate of Emeline Taylor, an insane person, now deceased. Woodcock sold property belonging to the estate in 1908, for $2300. This amount was not paid over to the estate and Woodcock, in his amended report, held that he should not be held accountable for interest on the sum, on the ground that his original appointment as administrator had not been legal. Attorney H. E. Slattery represented Woodcock in argument today. J. M. Devers appeared as counsel for the estate.

of cheese. I came across a stream and I soaked the bread and ate it. "I kept on coming until I got up where the shells were dropping all around me and then out where the shells from both sides were falling, and I sure thought it was all up with me. "I kept on going, though, and then I heard a sentry yell, 'Halt,' and I said, 'Don't shoot; I'm an American.' I went up to him and asked where headquarters was. Then I got an M. P. (military policeman) and he took me up to the A. P. M."

Crow Farmer Added to Role of Lane County Limit Club

Alex Swensen, farmer, residing on the Crow Stage route, became a member of the $1000 War Savings Limit club today. Mr. Swensen had purchased some stamps. He heard of plans for the organization of the limit club and decided to increase his investment to an amount which at maturity would have a value of $1000. Carl Washburne, chairman of the committee of the flying squadron, organizing the limit club, stated today that more than half of the 13 members of the club have made the pledges or purchases without solicitation.

American Troops in France Total More Than 1,100,000

Washington, July 13.—United States troops in France now number 1,100,000, General March told the senate military committee today. Of these, 331,000 are in the fighting line and the others, General March said, however, had a stage of training which would make them available in an extreme emergency. More than 25,000 American airplanes have been shipped to France up to July 5, March said.

"If It's THREADED-RUBBER It's a Willard"

Threaded-rubber insulation for batteries is a Willard invention, protected by their patents, and built exclusively by them.

For all electrical insulating purposes, rubber has no substitute. Its adaptation to the Willard Storage Battery makes an insulation that is practically indestructible, and at a moderate cost to install.

If you need a battery, you need a reliable one. Insist on threaded-rubber.
