turn, the Mountain States company buys the slabs, sawdust, shavings and other refuse of the mill for fuel. This is a great saving of wood, as this is usually consumed in great burners at most of the larger mills. The same arrangement is in effect at the Wendling mill except that here the Booth-Kelly company owns its own power plant. The sawmill part of the plant is operated by steam, while the planing mill is operated by electric power. The Booth-Kelly power plant also furnishes light and power for the city of Wendling. The Springfield sawmill is a band-saw plant, while the Wendling plant uses circular saws.

Little Handled by Hand—Both plants are highly equipped with nearly every labor saving device known to the lumber milling industry. Very little lumber in the mill is handled by hand. Inspecting the Springfield plant, the writer viewed electrically operated machines, controlled by levers and switches, picking the great logs from the waters of the mill pond, pushing them over the skids and onto the carriages of the gang-saws and the lumber being conveyed in carriers to all parts of the sawmill, planing mill, storage sheds and lumber yards.

About 150 men work on a shift at the Springfield mill, but if it were not for the modern labor-saving equipment, several times that number would be required to handle the same amount of lumber and the products would be much more costly. For instance, a great traveling crane, lifting heavy lumber from the docks to the freight cars, has often loaded as much as 15,000 feet in eight hours in operation by three men.

A traveling elevator monorail carrier picks up large blocks of lumber, weighing many tons, and transports it to nearly any part of the saw mill to the dry kilns, planing mill and yard. One man operating this machine carries all the lumber sawed in the mill to pieces for further planing and curing. The eight big dry kilns at the Springfield mill have a capacity of 200,000 board feet. A storage shed at the planing mill hold about 4,000,000 board feet of the finished lumber. Approximately 50 varieties of the finished product are kept in storage at all times. This storage enables builders in Eugene or other towns of the county to buy at the retail yards any amount of these various kinds of finished lumber. However, less than five per cent of the great output of the mills can be consumed locally.

Some idea of the number of main operations required in the manufacturing of finished lumber may be gained by tracing a piece of vertical grained flooring through the mill. From the pond the logs go to the carriage and are squared up, thence they are carried to the gang-saws where the vertical grain flooring is sawed; next the lumber goes to the trimmer where it is cut for length. The monorail then picks it up, carries it to the kiln stacker, then the lumber goes to the dry kiln where it is cured in about 48 hours. Then it is unstacked and the monorail carries it to the planing mill. Here it is machined, finished, graded, tied in bundles and labeled.

Work Under 45 Rules—The employees of the Booth-Kelly company work under the regulations of the Local Legion of Loggers and Lumbermen, to which they all belong, along with the officers of the company. There is never any friction in the plant or woods, all work contentment. Proof of this is that several men with the company have worked for Booth-Kelly continuously for 10 to 20 years. Several have been with the company since it was first organized. Nearly all the administrative officials have also been "through the mill" and all have a thorough understanding of the business and problems confronting the great industry.

Organized in 1888—The Booth-Kelly Lumber company was organized in 1888 as a partnership concern and based the mill which it operated at Saginaw. The concern consisted of Robert A. Booth, J. R. Booth, George H. Kelly and John P. Kelly. All the original members of the firm except H. A.

Booth, who is still its vice-president, have severed their connections with the company. The partnership was afterwards incorporated and the mill purchased. Later a mill was located at Coburg. Following this the mill at Wendling was constructed and an old mill site was purchased at Springfield. Later the Springfield mill was replaced with a new mill, which burned down in 1911 and was replaced in 1911 with the great modern plant of today.

The Wendling planing mill was also burned and replaced once. The mills at Saginaw were abandoned in 1910 and the Coburg mill in 1914, but the two finely equipped plants at Springfield and Wendling now saw more than all four of the mills formerly did.

Capitalized at $2,500,000—The Booth-Kelly company is now capitalized at 2,500,000, and of this $2,225,000 is paid up stock. The stock is held by about 50 people, of whom the board of directors are the principal stockholders. The board consists of R. E. Danaher, of San Francisco, president; R. A. Booth, Eugene, vice president; A. C. Dixon, Eugene, general manager; H. A. Dunbar, Eugene, secretary and treasurer; P. S. Brumby, of Portland, L. C. Rose, Chicago; J. A. Keating, San Francisco; M. H. Kelley, Duluth; J. W. Hodgett, a nationally known lumberman, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, is one of the largest stockholders.

Only about five per cent of the business of the Booth-Kelly company is transacted locally through its retail yards. Large lumber sales are made yearly in California, but the principal part of the business is done east of the Rocky mountains. There is some exporting through the port of Portland, to China, Japan, Australia and the west coast of South America. The sales offices are at Chicago, Minneapolis, Omaha, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Sacramento. The company maintains its central offices in Portland. L. L. Lewis is the sales manager, with sales offices in the Gasco building.

The general offices of the company are located in Eugene, at Fifth avenue and Willamette street. The company's administrative officers, with headquarters in Eugene, are A. C. Dixon, manager; H. A. Dunbar, secretary and treasurer; R. W. Martin, assistant sales manager, and in charge of operations at the mills; E. E. Martin is in charge of construction and repairs and safety work among employees; E. R. Endicott is the purchasing agent; J. A. Griffin is in charge of retail sales; and M. J. Skinner has charge of fire patrols and trespassers.

Department Heads Named—The Booth-Kelly fire patrol covers about 300,000 acres of privately owned timber besides that of the company, every year.

Heads of departments with headquarters in Springfield and Wendling are: Faye Abrams, logging superintendent; E. E. Miles, assistant logging superintendent and civil engineer, in charge of railroad construction; N. C. Neilson, superintendent of the Wendling mill; O. H. Jarrett, superintendent of the Springfield mill; and Arthur Stout, master mechanic.

After putting up a brilliant fight in the first period of last night's game against the veteran University of Washington five, Oregon finally succumbed to the Sun Dodgers by a 46 to 19 score.

In the last period of the game, machine-like team work of the northerners and their weight told heavily against the home boys. Whole-body substitutions in the last minutes failed to stop the slaughter.

By far the feature of the game was the work of the Oregon guards in holding Slisk, lanky center and sensation of the season, in three foul goals. Francis Beller did stellar work in his guard position. Rol Andre, Oregon forward, was the fastest man on the floor at any period of the game. For Washington, Lewis at forward started with seven goals scored from the floor. Score at the end of the first period was 12 to 21 after the Washingtonians held second even through most of the half. The second of the two-game series will be played at 7:30 tonight, the last game this season between the two schools being Oregon's victory last the first two games of the season to the Sun Dodgers at Seattle. LESTER CALLAWAY HURT IN RUNAWAY

Lester Callaway had his scalp and three or four ribs broken as a result of being run over by a lumber wagon this morning about 8 o'clock.

The accident occurred near the Midway planing mill, Mill street and Sixth avenue west, as Callaway was hauling some piece of lumber from the old mill to the boiler room. The material slipped down on to the dangle-bars and frightened the horses, which started to run, causing Callaway to lose his balance and fall in front of the wagon, the rear wheels of which afterwards passed over his body.

The injured man, who is 35 years of age, was taken to his home at 631 Twelfth avenue west by Dr. C. D. Donaldson, who gave prompt medical assistance. The injuries, while painful, are not expected to result seriously.

FARMERS' COUNCIL PLANS PROJECTS AND ELECTS OFFICERS

Recommending to the County Agricultural council that it co-operate in the state's drainage program and carry forward projects contemplated in Lane county and naming other projects that should receive attention during the year, Ira P. Whitney, county agricultural agent, rendered his annual report to the council at the all-day meeting today.

H. C. Wheeler, elected president of the Lane county agricultural council, at the afternoon session. Other officers elected were: Cal Young, vice-president; F. T. Harlow, secretary and treasurer; and W. A. Ayres, Oscar Dunlap and E. E. Taylor, members of the executive committee.

The state project program which was worked out at conference of county agents held at A. C. including constructive work in many lines. Drainage is held one of the most important and it is regarded as the most important in Lane county.

Mr. Whitney recommended that the work on rodents be renewed next year especially on the gray diggers. The council has adopted the slogan, "No gray diggers by 1924," and it is expected that 75 per cent of the pest can be eradicated this year by poison.

The county agent's report showed that there were 2,229 calls made to his office in 1921, letters written, 1623; circular letters sent out, 67, or 16,705 copies; meetings addressed by the county agent, 65; or 64,014 people; farms visited 103 and days spent in the field 207, and in the office, 163.

The projects promoted by the council in 1922 were county organization work, livestock dairying, crop production, poultry, horticulture, marketing, club work, fairs and tuberculosis testing.
