"Let's go" was an excellent war slogan, but it is playing havoc with home life in America.

RIPPLING RHYMES

UNTIMELY TALK

Sometimes, returning from the mart, my life is full of care, with problems grave that break my heart, and ache and fester there. For silence then my spirit pants; it is the calm that heals; and I'd be glad if all my aunts would cut out foolish spels. But they've a dozen tales to tell to make me stand against, of piffing mishaps that befell since I was with them last. They see the ghastly sweet of grief upon my pallid brow, but they won't make their stories brief, or only rest allow. The gossip of the neighborhood I hear in all details: how Mrs. Junk and Mrs. Stood, scurried with their finger-nails; the Smiths were driven from their flat; my Aunt Jemima drooled, because they kept an Aardale cat, which was against the rules; old Gaffer Twinkle beat his wife, with many gusty smacks, because she used his pocket-knife to pry out rusty ticks. I'm wearied by the beastly grind, I'm faded and distraught, and I have problems in my mind that calls for sober thought. And all the female of my house, my aunts and nieces, aunts, are chirping round like startled cranes, and wrench this heart of mine. When can, who wins the daily bread, to his black swallow goes, his aunt should merely soak his head, and let him have repose.

ENGLISH GOLF STARS HERE

New York, July 13.—(Navy.)

Herd, prominent British professional golfer and one of the foremost authorities on the game in England, arrived here today on the Olympic to make an exhibition tour of the United States.

He was accompanied by J. H. Taylor, another prominent British professional, who will accompany him on the tour.

FAILURE AT THE HAGUE

The Hague conference has failed because there was no possible way in which to bring it to a successful conclusion. Russian affairs were foremost, and nothing can be done toward assisting that country until the government reaches a point where it can be trusted. The United States took no part in the conference, and the only other leading nations of Europe, which are solvent, England and France, will not deal with a Russia which stands pat on debt repudiation and gives no guarantee of future good faith in its international dealings. As an evidence of the difficulties confronting the conference delegates, an Eastern editorial writer summarizes the situation in the following brief description of the warring factional interests developed at the meeting.

Apparently there are at The Hague two parallel sets of negotiations in progress. The first is between government agents. It has to do chiefly with abstractions and formalities which would be quite important if for the present they were not almost wholly academic. The counters in this game on the Allied side are the diplomatic recognition of the Soviet government; on the Russian side they are the diplomatic recognition of their debts. If this negotiation were a complete success the Russians would recognize debts that they cannot pay and the Allied governments would give a legal basis for credits which as governments they cannot promise to furnish.

The second set of negotiations is between Soviet agents and a host of private interests. The counters in this game are speculative profits for the concession-seekers and speculative capital for certain Russian industries. Soviet strategy here is to separate the wolves from the lambs by feeding the wolves concessions and the lambs promises. It is not a pleasant spectacle and no friend of Russia can look without dismay upon the extremes to which it can possibly be carried.

This underground bargaining is infinitely worse than the academic logic-chopping of the official negotiations. For the official negotiations will at least continue to fail until reason and moderation assert themselves, but this back-door traffic might, to the misfortune of Russia, thrive too well.

WHAT IS REAL SUCCESS

One man of our acquaintance earns $15,000 a year. Another man we know just as well, earns $3000, says Tom Dreier in Forbes' Magazine.

If you were asked to tell us which is the more successful, the chances are, ten to one, that you would answer, "Why, the one who earns $15,000 a year."

If you made that answer you would be wrong. No man's success can be measured by the size of his income.

It happens that the $15,000 man spends far more than he earns. He is in debt all the time and if his income ceased for any reason he would be dead broke.

The other man who only earns $3000 a year, not only lives within his income, but carries a life insurance policy for the protection of his family, and as a result of his thrifty habits, has $10,000 scattered around in various savings banks, and in one co-operative society.

Perhaps more important than the money this second man has, is the peace of mind that is his. He has played the game of life according to the rules and is conscious of the fact that he has done good work. He enjoys life because his mind is not cluttered up with worries over debts and other negative things.

President Carl Gray, of the Union Pacific, replying to an inquiry from the Bend Chamber of Commerce, seems to dodge the question of new railroad construction, in case the Southern Pacific and Central Pacific roads are unmerged. He says:

"Our good faith in the program referred to is reflected by the investment that we made and our interest in Central, Eastern and Southern Oregon has not diminished, but we will not mislead and cannot commit ourselves to construction until we know where the traffic is coming from to support and operate the line.

"What we may be able to do to carry out our original program and build from Bend to Odell and from Natron to Ontario depends upon the outcome of the Central Pacific-Southern Pacific case and the relation of the Union Pacific with respect to the Western Oregon traffic which it enjoyed when its plan of development was made."

A San Francisco hotel has placed radio-telephones at all the tables in its dining room, and the guests listen to a concert while they eat. Furthermore, the plan works nicely in drawing the guest's attention away from the prices on the bill of fare.

Oregon is reported to have 65,423 persons either partially or wholly mental defectives who are dependent on society for support. Also there are probably as many public job holders, explaining in a large measure why taxes are high with indications of going still higher.

Can any old-timer remember when the farmers of the Middle West voted for a change because Woodrow Wilson wouldn't guarantee them three dollars a bushel for their wheat?

California officials do not seem to take much interest in the construction of the Roosevelt highway. Probably they know the more roads there are into Oregon, the harder it will be to keep California people and money at home.

Tchitcherlin is the latest Russian statesman to suffer a nervous collapse. Their government has never been in any other condition and it is probably contagious.

Glenn Voliva, high priest of Zion, predicts the end of the world in 1925. That may explain why Germany waits a moratorium during 1923 and 1924.

News that the strike of German printers has been settled is coincident with the report that another large issue of paper money has been decided upon.

BEING ENGAGED

Chapter 89.

Of all the people who may have been surprised by the announcement of the engagement, none was more so than Amy herself.

On the way home in Adam's car, packed with the other guests, she began to think about it.

How had it started—oh yes, the silver paper crown, which Dave had cut out and which clearly called for a head to put it on—that's how Adam came to have the silly thing on him, and to be saluted as a king.

That's what suggested to the mischievous "Dum" sister that they should hold a mock court and Adam should have a queen. "Dum" knew well enough the little black-eyed girl was to quote her "outs over Adam"—she discovered it with her sister to have him catch Amy. She disliked the black-haired girl.

So the crown started it. Dave was a young illustrator who amused himself sometimes by cutting animals out of paper, folding the paper ingeniously to give a more lifelike appearance to his "barnyard." He had been doing this—cutting out paper, making them guess what it would be when folded. It never came out the animal they expected when a few wrinkles made a strangely shaped piece of paper into a very clever duckhead or lion or ape.

So Dave had started it, really.

Her mother simply said, when they entered the apartment together, "Why didn't you tell me before, Amy? Surely you can confide in me now. I haven't opposed you for a great many months."

Amy nearly wept, she was so penitent. "I would have told you, honestly mother, but I didn't know—really I didn't. Adam has played around—but he never said anything definite."

She leaned against the wall, pulling off a long sigh. It was very late, and there were shadows under the girl's eyes. Her ceaseless activity was beginning to tell on even her buoyant strength. Amy still kept up her French and Italian lessons, though she had been compelled to drop dancing classes and piano study.

Mrs. Talbot followed her daughter down the dark hallway, walking softly so as not to awaken Laura. In Amy's room they stopped. Amy began unwinding the scarf that kept her hair from blowing when she was in the car.

"I know you and lots of other people, thought we were secretly engaged," she said. "I never said anything, I rather wanted people to believe that. Adam is rich, he's a good catch, a lot of women were after him. He knew it too—that's why he held off."

"But he wasn't sure of himself for all that. He was always just afraid the girls he liked might turn him down if he asked any of them to marry him. He was afraid of Dick, he was afraid to ask him for a favor, I would say no, and that would hurt his vanity."

"I suppose that's why he took this way of announcing it."

"But Amy—if it wasn't true, why didn't you deny it?"

"Heaven's! It was awkward enough—being told I was engaged. Besides, Adam honestly believes we have been all along—only he was just afraid to ask me outright, for fear I might refuse him."

The pretty, flimsy dress had slipped from her shoulders, showing all the soft curves of her neck and her arms, the white skin that was so smooth as polished marble. All her youthfulness, her slenderness—Mrs. Talbot choked so she could not speak. Amy was so young and tender and innocent for all her carefully hoarded knowledge of the world's wickedness! She was sacred to her mother, mentally and physically—and this man did not dare weep openly, that would only make matters worse. She seemed to be taking the whole thing calmly—she was shaking out her hair now, which fell in a red gold mass down her back, over the frail pinkness of one of Claire's discarded silk nightgowns.

Mrs. Talbot wondered about something else.

"What did Dick say?" she asked.

"Nothing. Not even goodnight." Amy answered, her back turned as she shook out her dress and hung it away.

The mother went out, closing the door, and Amy slid into bed. In the darkness she had to face the realities of the situation. In the day she could remember the gray and pink and blue suite of rooms the furnishings of which she had chosen. Adam had almost implied he was doing them hoping she would one day live in them.
