Oregon Will Get Railroad, Crockatt Idea

Eyes of all Oregon will be turned towards Portland on Wednesday of this week when before examination of the interstate commerce commission will be resumed the hearings on the Oregon public service commission's fight for a railroad across central Oregon, to be built by the Union Pacific.

Peter Crockatt, of the economics department of the University of Oregon and a coast authority on transportation, will continue to be one of the main witnesses for the state.

Crockatt says that such a preponderance of evidence is being piled up that the interstate commerce commission will be hard put to find anything but a verdict for the public service commission.

When the railroads interested are showing no disposition to fight tonnage claims made for this territory, he says, and cites one instance where the state of Oregon introduced into the records as its own testimony a booster pamphlet put out by the Southern Pacific, entitled, "Oregon, the West's Last Uncultivated Melon."

In this instance the state was using the railroad's own literature to boost the cause of a trans-state rail line.

Crockatt points out that the state is making no efforts to decide which form, if any, of common user rights is to be applied to the railroad cut-off should the case be won.

Hearings will be resumed before Commissioner Gephart, who is new in the case. Another official heard the first part of the case.

SCAIFE PASSES BOOZE REMOR ON WOODRUFF

Massachusetts Official Cross - Examines Scaife About Latter's Charges That Liquor Was Taken

Washington, April 21.—Representative Frederick H. Gillett of Massachusetts, speaker of the house of representatives, appeared today before the Wheeler-Howard committee to defend himself against the charge he received confiscated liquor from department of justice agents.

Gillett branded the story as "absolutely false." He was permitted to cross-examine H. L. Scaife, former department of justice agent, who had made the charge.

Gillett demanded to know where Scaife got his information that the confiscated liquor was sent to his office.

"From Representative Woodruff (republican of Michigan)," Scaife said.

"Did Woodruff tell you I received liquor from the department of justice?" Gillett demanded.

"Yes, and from other persons," said Scaife.

"What did Woodruff tell you?" "Mr. Woodruff told me you had the receipt to show the disposition of this liquor."

"Did you see them?" "No, Judge Daniel T. Wright said the records of the department showed a trunk of liquor was sent to your office," said Scaife.

"Do you deny that?" "I certainly do," said Gillett.

When Scaife attempted to question Gillett further, the speaker stopped him and Gillett took the stand in his own defense.

He said he had heard of newspaper reports in the spring of 1919 that a trunk of liquor was shipped to his office.

"I never use liquor and there never has been a drop of liquor in my office," said Gillett. "I finally decided to investigate the reports. I found that a constituent en route to Florida lost one of his trunks containing golf clubs, golf clothes and several bottles of whiskey."

Gillett makes Statement. "This was before the Volstead act became effective but it was illegal to transport liquor through a dry state. I investigated the missing trunk and learned that in the station here one of the bottles broke and the trunk was seized by the department of justice. This constituent was going fishing in Florida and he had taken six bottles of whiskey with him for use on the fishing trip. I finally arranged with the department of justice that the man's trunk and his golf clubs should be returned to him. It was sent to my office and turned over to my constituent."
