

BIG YEAR IN SIGHT IN MINES OF LANE

Considerable activity and interest is being displayed in the Bohemia mining district of Lane county and a big year is in sight starting in the spring, according to the opinion of men interested in the field. Fred Bartels, J. H. Bartels, Ed Jenkins and John Klopouk, who are interested in mining prospects in that section, were here yesterday to talk over road improvement with the county court. Although there is considerable snow at present in the Bohemia district underground work can be carried on, in the report. Recently several mining claims have been located showing that new discoveries are becoming interested in the Lane gold fields.

Life Story Of Florence Kling Harding Is Story Of Battle Against Odds

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—(AP)—The life story of Florence Kling Harding, like an epic of sturdy American womanhood, was a chronicle of continual struggle against great odds, and of continual accomplishments.

From the day she first faced the world in a pioneer home in the middle west, until, broken in health, she undertook the heavy responsibilities of the White House, she encountered hardships before which a less courageous spirit would have weakened into drab mediocrity.

The most severe test of her fortitude was during the final illness and death of Mr. Harding and the trying ordeal that followed—the cross-country trip with the body; the public services in Washington; then the trip to and the funeral at Marion, Ohio. Mrs. Harding had hardly recovered from an illness during which her life hung in the balance when it came time for the president to start upon what proved his final trip, that to Alaska. Because of her devotion to her distinguished husband and unselfish of her own physical condition, she accompanied him on that journey and was constantly by his side. During the president's illness at San Francisco she never left him for a minute and it was she who summoned the physicians when the change came that finally resulted in death.

Retains Courage
Despite these trials she not only kept her courage and her vigorous individuality, but she retained as well a depth of human understanding and a confidence in herself and those about her that endeared her to many thousands. After she became First Lady of the Land, as always in the years preceding, the helplessness and the unfortunate received the first and fullest measure of her devotion. Children of every class had her unfailing attention. Wounded veterans of the World War owed her many a debt for hours gladdened by her visits to their hospitals or by flowers sent by her personal order from the White House conservatories. Her unusual outpouring of sympathy extended to animals, many of whom she befriended and protected.

In her thoughtfulness for the interests of others and in her loyalty to her friends, she was outspoken to a degree that won for her recognition as one of the most vigorous-minded women who ever presided over the household of a president. On the night of election day in 1920 she announced her determination to send away the policeman stationed at the White House gates since the United States entered the war—a purpose which was fulfilled on the very day Mr. Harding took office. Before he these responsibilities she was determined not to shirk. Nor did she interpret in any narrow sense the obligations of mutual helpfulness she had assumed when, in 1891, she became the wife of a struggling newspaper editor back in Marion. Even in those days she gave vastly more to the marriage partnership than a woman usually is able to contribute, and grown men in Marion today remember how she used to court out newspapers to them when they were newboys. When the future President entered politics, she found new and unexpected ways of helping him. As the wife of a senator, she kept in touch with hundreds in her state who wanted help in Washington, besides maintaining her place fittingly in the social life of the capital.

Born in Ohio
Mrs. Harding was born in Marion, Ohio, in 1860, of a sturdy stock of pioneers, her father, Amos Kling, being one of the town's first settlers. She married Mr. Harding in 1891 when things did not look too bright for him. He had just taken over the ownership of the Marion Star, and it was loaded down with mortgages and still had to make a place for itself in the community. She never had been used to extravagance, however, and she immediately turned to the task of helping her husband on a sound basis. She went to work in the business office, and soon was in charge of advertising and circulation, buying the print paper and other supplies, and even standing by the press and instructing the carriers before they started on their routes. She mothered the club established for the carrier boys, one of whom, answering to the name of Harding, entered the army, rose to the rank of Major and was later detailed at the White House as military aide to the President. Another was George Christian, who became the President's private secretary.

Of slight build and medium height, Mrs. Harding carried herself strongly erect and with charming dignity. Though her hair was silvering before she came to the White House, her eyes were bright, her manner as vivacious, and her glances and smiles as radiant as when she was a girl. She was always well-gowned, but never cared for extreme in dress. Her coiffure particularly was said to be the mystery and envy of many Washington society leaders. She had an interesting collection of lace and some rare and handsome piece usually helped to complete her gown. She did not attach jewelry of unusual value, but wore only a diamond solitaire or a diamond clasp on a piece of black velvet about the throat.

In her younger days she had been an expert horsewoman and an accomplished pianist. Many musicians will always remember the interest she took in them. While in Marion she taught music, and many of the boys and girls of her home town were her pupils. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, but was very tolerant of others, and as the President was a Baptist, it was the custom of the Hardings to attend the Calvary Baptist Church in Washington.

President Harding was the second husband of Mrs. Harding. Her first was Henry DeWolfe, whose parents were neighbors of the Kling family. This marriage contracted early in life, proved to be unhappy and the future mistress of the White House obtained a divorce in 1886 on grounds of gross neglect. One son, Marshall Eugene DeWolfe, lived to manhood. His death occurred at Kersey, Colo., in 1911.

JUDGE TO EXCUSE JURYMEN TODAY

With the close of the last action on the present docket of the circuit court the jury will be excused subject to the call of the court, according to announcement today of Judge Kendall, of Coos county, who has been hearing cases here for the past several days while Judge Skipworth holds court at the Coos Bay district. The case of Wilson against the Hartford Life Insurance company has been discontinued and the case today of the Union Bank of Canada against Noble Grand Hyland will clear the local docket. Judge Kendall will remain here until tomorrow to hear cases in equity and then "I am going to Corvallis to take in the football game" is the judicial decision from which there will be no appeal, the judge declares.

Both Judge Skipworth and Judge Kendall who changed positions on the bench of their respective districts took over libel suits against newspapers. These cases are rare and both Judge Skipworth and Judge Kendall were disqualified to hear the cases in their own districts. The case here against the Register Publishing company was dismissed after a short hearing and the case against the Coos Bay Times was won by the defendant, according to word received here today.

Row River Span to Have Repairs Made

Repair of the Carrin bridge over the Row river in southern Lane county is planned and P. M. Morse, county surveyor, with members of the county court made an inspection trip there today. "The span has been cindered and should be rebuilt entirely," according to Mr. Morse, who adds that it is impossible to build a new bridge now and the present span cannot be closed as a mail-route would have to be changed and cause much inconvenience to those who are served. It will be determined today just what repairs will be necessary in order to make the bridge serviceable until spring, Mr. Morse said.

Rotary Club Will Plan Delegations

Eugene Rotary will be represented 100 per cent at the district meeting of the order to be held at Portland next March, according to members of the board of directors of the local club who are making preliminary plans for the gathering. The northwest district of Rotary comprises the clubs in Oregon, Washington and British Columbia. Forty-nine members are now enrolled in the Eugene club.

HEMSTITCHING AND PECOTING

EXAMINATION IS TO CONTINUE IN SHEATSLY CASE

CANTON, Ohio, Nov. 21.—Hoping further questioning of relatives of Mrs. Adelle Sheatsley, wife of C. V. Sheatsley, pastor of Christ's church, Bexley, a suburb of Columbus, Ohio, who found the charred body of his wife in the furnace at the Sheatsley home Monday night bring some clue which would solve the mysterious cremation, Prosecutor John R. King of Franklin county (Columbus), today continued examination of Mr. Sheatsley and his four children.

Funeral services for Mrs. Sheatsley were held at Paris, near here, yesterday.

Prosecutor King is also waiting for a report on Columbus analytical chemists, who made an analysis of the lungs and esophagus of Mrs. Sheatsley, which Mr. King said would be forwarded to him here today. The prosecutor hopes that the analysis will disclose whether or not Mrs. Sheatsley breathed in the furnace. Mr. King declared last night he "is not satisfied she entered the furnace voluntarily."

"I am of the opinion," he said, "that eventual disclosures will produce facts necessary to prove that she did not choose this method to take her life. I do not say, understand that another killed her. That is possible, of course, but I am inclined more and more to believe that her body was placed in the furnace after life had passed from the body."

Questioned by Mr. King, Mrs. Lydia Sponseller, 80-year-old mother of the victim, in a statement said the Sheatsley family, with whom she lived for a number of years, "the most agreeable family I have ever seen. Adelle was good and kind to me and so was her husband."
