

MR. HUGHES TO RUN IN 1928, GERMANS SAY

Comments Heard On Resignation of Secretary of State Saturday

HAMBURG, Germany, Jan. 12.—Commenting on his resignation, the Hamburger Nachrichten expresses belief that Charles E. Hughes intends to run for president. The paper terms him "a sensible and moderate politician."

Referring to Mr. Hughes' New Haven reparation speech, which formed the basis of Chancellor Cuno's economic program, the paper observes: "In it, for the first time a statesman among Germany's former enemies showed a desire for conciliation and pointed out possibilities for a solution, which, while not acceptable in all details to Germany, were certainly hopeful."

PARIS PAPERS COMMENT
 PARIS, Jan. 12.—Paris newspapers offer explanations for the resignation of Secretary Hughes and for the appointment of Ambassador Kellogg to succeed him which are more ingenious than convincing.

"Pertinax" of the Echo de Paris, believes Mr. Hughes is resigning because he does not see eye to eye with President Coolidge. The writer says that the president "dominated by the senate" desires a policy of isolation, while Secretary Hughes, "who spent his life among the half-European society of New York is inclined to intervene in the old world controversies."

"Pertinax" says it is certain that the reign of the republican senate will be confirmed.

He adds that as a "lawyer trained in the country, the secretary of state probably is not big enough man to resist the assembly or carry it with him."

Secretary Hughes in the view of M. St. Brice of Le Journal, is retiring because he intends to run for president.

Janet Young to be At Heilig Tuesday Night in 'You and I'

"You and I," playing at the Heilig tomorrow night, is heralded as the typical American play. It is the story of a man who gave up his dream for marriage.

There's Matey and his delightful wife, Nancy, whose early and very happy marriage drowns the artist-husband in a business which couldn't satisfy his longing to paint. Nancy knows what he has pushed out of his life for her, and the old college chum, Geoff, understands fully how they both feel. Geoff gave up love for a literary career, but Matey is positive that Nancy out-balances any artistic fame. The old longing for art comes back to Matey with a mighty surge when he finds his own son, Ricky—very modern, very boyish—born between art without marriage and marriage without art, as an architect. Romy, the girl, who seems as capable of filling Ricky's life as Nancy has filled Matey's, has a head which sees far beyond the desire of her heart and begins to open the eyes of all the others.

Janet Young as Nancy and Moroni Olson as Matey promise something more than the usual, Sumner Cobb, the son, and Byron Foulger as Geoff, the cheerfully philosophical, "who was merely clever with his typewriter," provide very adequate support.

Sim Pate Arrested

An hour after Taylor's confession had been given, Sim Pate, bootlegger and underworld character was in the county jail charged with murder. It was Pate, according to Taylor's confession who plotted the robbery which ended in murder. It was Pate who procured the guns; it was Pate who induced the other accomplices to join in the robbery; and it was Pate, losing his nerve at the crucial moment who remained at the door, refusing to enter the gambling house, leaving his pals to enter and complete the robbery.

It was on information procured by the two newspapers that Pate was first taken into custody for questioning Friday afternoon. He underwent a severe grilling, but was released from custody early Saturday evening. Working independent of the sheriff's office and other peace authorities, the two newspapers, together with Fred Morley, ex-constable, who was employed by them, dug up evidence against Taylor, Pate and some of his pals early last Friday evening.

Governor's Aid Asked.
 Denied special commissions as deputy sheriffs by Sheriff Burt Hawkins, who scoffed at the idea that they could aid in solving the crime, the newspapers got into communication with Governor Walter M. Pierce at Salem and induced him to telegraph them special commissions as state agents, to clothe them with the authority to make the arrest.

With these telegraphed commissions tucked away in their pockets, Perkins, Malarkey and Motley began a wild all-night ride over the mountains to a lonely ranch house in the Applegate country, 12 miles west of Jacksonville and 95 miles from Klamath Falls, there, shortly at one o'clock Saturday morning they roused Taylor out of bed and placed him under arrest.

He accepted his arrest as a matter of course. All through the long ride, through Jacksonville, through Medford and back up over the Cascades with the little car bucking the snowdrifts, he chatted easily with his captors.

tores, apparently unconcerned over his capture.

At eight o'clock Saturday morning the quartette arrived in Klamath Falls. Desiring above all things to keep the story for their paper, the newspapermen took their captive, not to jail, but to the hotel, where for 12 hours he blandly withstood their questioning.

Finally William Ganong, district attorney was taken into their confidence and the prisoner removed to his office. Here he remained obdurate and for another day and night laughed at all attempts to wring a confession from his lips.

Finally, at midnight, closeted alone with Perkins, he suddenly inquired regarding the calibre of the bullet that had killed Erickson. Learning that a bullet from an automatic had caused his death, he suddenly acceded to Perkins' insistent arguments and said he would confess.

Tells of Plotting.
 He told of how they had plotted the crime in a bootlegging dive; of how they had sought to induce a certain underworld character to join them in their outlawry; of how the man's wife fashioned masks for them and fitted them to their heads, after her husband had reiterated his determination to "go straight," how they had staged the robbery and a so-called accidental slaying of Erickson; of the wild dash in a small touring car from the scene of crime to the snow-carpeted hills north of the city where the division had been made.

And then he told of the remorse which came over him as he lay that night on his hotel bed, tossing and tumbling and unable to sleep after he had learned that Erickson had been murdered.

Signs Statement

After his story had been poured into the ears of the newspapermen, Taylor relaxed and said he was ready to make a signed statement.

Malarkey, District Attorney Ganong and his deputy, W. P. Myers, were then called into the office by Perkins, when the story was again told with the district attorney serving as his own stenographer. When the notes had been transcribed a few minutes later, Taylor, still possessed of the iron nerve and cold demeanor, took the district attorney's fountain pen in fingers which did not tremble and signed his confession.

According to Jackson county authorities, Taylor had been a model youth until he joined forces with Sim Pate several months ago. It was then he started bootlegging and moonshining operations and got himself embroiled in minor difficulties. Now, and then he would return to his brother's farm in the Applegate country riding the range and helping with general ranch work. His wife and four-year-old daughter are living with his brother.
