JACK DAW'S ADVENTURES

Story by Hal Cochran— Drawings by L. W. Redner AT LOG RIVER—CHAPTER 7

The little rowboat seemed to fight back as it was being towed gut of the rapidly moving water. Jack realized that he and Dotty were being hauled toward the shore, but he also realized that the men on shore would have to move faster or the little craft would drift on to the rapids.

"WE'RE getting close to the waterfall," shouted the little adventurer. "Better hurry!" Flip in the meantime stood at the bow of the boat and barked loudly. He, too, seemed to realize that the job of rowing Jack and Dotty must be rushed, and his barks were likely meant to hurry the shoremen.

His interest toward the shore to which the boat was being pulled. Jack had not looked back to the opposite shore. Suddenly there came another splash through the air and a new piece of rope landed right across the middle of the rowboat. It had been thrown from the shore above. (Continued.)

G. O. P. SPLITS ON INSURGENT PLAN

Senator Watson explained, that not only should these senators not be invited to attend further conferences, but that they should not be named in filling republican vacancies on committees. "Then, if these gentlemen are not to be treated as republicans," Senator Borah returned, "by what right does a republican committee on committees assign them to places on the standing committees?"

Senator Borah declared removal of the insurgent group from their positions of seniority was "impolitic, unwise and unfair." "It is not only unfair to the men themselves," said Senator Borah, "but it is unfair to their constituents. I venture to say that within the next two years my colleagues will regret this action and will look back upon it as a mistake."

Republican campaign spokesmen, he predicted would have to leave the school of their time "in explaining this act to the constituents when they go into these men's states." "You may denounce these men," he continued, "but they have the same influence in the senate they always had. There is a difference of opinion in the republican party, but it is not confined to the leaders but exists among the constituents."

"If these men stood alone, it would be different. But I see men sitting in this chamber today whose seats will be imperilled if this program goes through."

Black satin appears every spring, but this spring it is quite the smartest of many years. The ensemble finds new world to conquer. Now it's the hat and parasol; the hat and scarf; or hat, purse and shoes, that match. The separate coat for spring is often of tweed or imported novelty fabric with the minimum of collar and a wide fur band around the bottom. With the general shortening of skirts the waist line puts in appearance but seldom. Chiffon peasant sleeves, sometimes embroidered, are often the only color on a dark gown, but they are sufficient unto themselves. Prints appear in an endless array—in bold patterns and bright colors.
