EUGENE MAN WINS 10-ROUND BATTLE

A decision on points was given by the referee to "Slow" York of Eugene, welterweight fighter, in a ten round battle last night with Lon Perry, of Portland, a negro, at the Winter Garden.

Both fighters gamely slugged their way through the 10 rounds, but each was so tired he could hardly hold up his hand at the end of the contest. It was the main fight in a card staged by Jack O'Neil, promoter. The bout, in spite of its mild ending, pleased the spectators because of the heavy punching. The fighters slugged each other often and hard, but both were in good condition, and able to stand 10 rounds of such punishment.

Ed Hathaway lost to Harold Davis in a semi wind-up of six rounds, after Davis landed a heavy blow amidships.

John Wilson heard the birdies singing in the third round of a four-round preliminary with Peewee Bond, and Bond got credit for a knockout.

Floyd DeFigure took the decision from Jack Yetch in another four-round opener, and "Nard" Mayhew won from Hay Morrall at the end of four rounds.

Pat Clifford and Henry Hickman went to a draw in the preliminary.

Carl Miller was referee, and "Happy" Burgess, announcer.

Billy Evans Says—

By BILLY EVANS

IT IS a rather unusual fact that few stars in the world of sport are satisfied with their athletic status.

While delighted to be at the head of their profession, rated champions, still most of them aspired to shine in some other sport, if not in some other sport, at some position other than the one they won fame at.

Take the case of Hoppe for instance. Every time I chat with the billiard marvel he expresses regret that he didn't take up a baseball career.

Recently, after upsetting the dope by defeating Bob Cannefax, three-cushion champion, Hoppe laughingly remarked that he still had something to shoot at, a big league baseball berth.

Hoppe, as a youngster, showed great proficiency at the game, but was even more brilliant at billiards. Since sensitive fingers, the touch, is everything in billiards, Hoppe was forced to give up his baseball aspirations. It is his one regret in life.

Despite the fact that an injury to one of his fingers, due to being struck by a ball might ruin his career, it is not unusual for Hoppe to be seen working out with some big league club in practice before the game.

"Cannon-ball" Martin, bantam champion, is strong for baseball. Up until he won the title he was considered an even better ball player than fighter.

Martin, small of stature, was a great admirer of "Rabbit" Maranville. To Martin, the brilliance of Maranville was proof there was a real chance for the midget to make good in the majors.

Ty Cobb would have much preferred to have won fame as a pitcher rather than outfielder. Even to this day, after 20 years in the majors, warming up to a catcher is more interesting to Cobb than chasing fly balls.

In the days when the spitball was the outstanding delivery, Cobb developed a good one and during batting practice often did the pitching to his teammates.

In those days the Tigers were real sluggers and nothing afforded Cobb more pleasure than making one of the star hitters miss a couple in a row.

Mr. Nash Pleased With Eugene Links

The Eugene Country club links is similar in many ways to the Epsom Downs golf course in England, according to John Henry Nash, world famous printer who was the outstanding figure at the newspaper conference held in Eugene last week-end. The Epsom Downs course, said Mr. Nash, is one of the oldest courses in England, and is adjoining the famous Derby race track.

Mr. Nash, whose name is internationally known among the lovers of rare books and printing, has played on many courses in the United States and England. He said that few courses he had seen could surpass the beauty and charm of the Eugene links.

Mr. and Mrs. Nash motored to Eugene from San Francisco for the conference. Mr. Nash bringing, besides $25,000 worth of rare old books, his set of golf clubs. During the conference he found time to play three times, once each on Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

During the summer Mr. Nash plans to go on a hunting trip to Canada. If his plans mature, he expressed the hope that he might stop over in Eugene and play another round or two.

Basketball Game Result Disputed

VIDA, Ore., March 17.—(Special).—Friday night, March 13, Vida played two basketball games with Thurston. The girl's game resulted in a score of 29 to 15 in favor of Thurston. If the score had been correctly kept in the boys game it would have stood, at the end of the game, 13 to 12 in favor of Vida. The scorekeeper failed to record one point made by Carey Thomson of the Vida team, thrown from the 15-foot line; and gave the score as 12 to 12. The scorekeeper afterward said that he failed to record the score. Vida then played five minutes longer, and Thurston claims the victory with a score of 16 to 14.

Sport Talk

CERTAIN ball clubs often hold a sort of spell over other teams. That is, one club may be particularly easy picking for another regardless of their respective standings in the league. Obviously, pennants are sometimes won and lost in this manner, the feat working both ways.

Back in 1909 the Chicago Cubs held such a hand over the Boston Braves. In the 22 games played between the two teams that season, the Cubs won all but one. That, according to the records, is the most games one club ever won from another during a season's play.

In the American League Boston, in 1904, whipped Washington 20 times to but two defeats and the Athletics turned a similar trick on St. Louis in 1911.

Harrisburg Takes Practice Baseball Game by 9-6 Score

HARRISBURG, March 17.—(Special)—Harrisburg high school took the long end of a 9 to 6 score Friday afternoon in a practice game on the local school ground with the Brownsville high school baseball team. Harrisburg was first to score, when two of the local boys crossed the plate in the first inning. Brownsville evened the count in the second inning and then went out in front, due to a number of errors. Harrisburg started scoring again in the seventh inning with the count 5 to 2 against them. Brownsville made its last tally in the seventh. The locals kept on scoring however and the game ended in their favor. Johnnie Scott, local shortstop, put the ball over the fence for a homer in the sixth frame, bringing in two other players ahead of him. Doras Colburn, star pitcher of last year, and his veteran backstop, Harry Rice formed the local battery. Brownsville used two twirlers, "Doc" Overton, starting in the box with Tyser later relieving him. The locals' lineup is as follows: Harry Rice, catcher; Doras Colburn, pitcher; George Wilhelm, 1b.; Harold Weber, 2b; Chyde Perkins, 3b; Johnnie Scott, ss; Carroll Morgan, lf; Deryl Huston, rf; Morris Holt, cf. The Brownsville team will meet the locals in the first game of the league season on the school grounds here next Friday afternoon.

Sport Oddities

By ART CARLSON

For many years, in the executive office of the New York Giants, there hung a neat little picture frame. From a most conspicuous spot on the wall it dangled.

Inside the pretty little frame wasn't a time-worn print of some old player, manager or official either, as you might suspect. It was but a piece of paper. Inside—

But first let's go back to the season of 1906. On the Cincinnati team that year was a hustling chap named Cy Seymour. Cy, for several campaigns, had been one of the Red's brightest stars. Only the year before he had led the league in batting with a splendid mark of .377.

Now in those hectic days Hans Wagner was at about the height of his sensational career. Year after year the "Flying Dutchman" had been the Babe Ruth of the circuit. And during those seasons it was Cy Seymour who ranked as one of Wagner's greatest challengers for swatting honors. So, when Seymour reached the topmost rung in 1905, he momentarily halted the Wagner hitting regime.

Seymour's stellar work with the stick obviously caused plenty of notice. The Giants were one club favorably impressed with Cy's performances. So much so in fact that they immediately started dickering for his services. But the Reds were a bit reluctant about listening to any offers. Finally, however the deal was consummated when New York offered $10,000 for Seymour.

Of course, today you couldn't buy a good minor leaguer for that sum, let alone a big-time batting champion, but in those times it was heaps o' coin. And the New York assemblage, consequently felt very proud of the reckless manner in which it spent its cash.

And that's why—

But that brings us back again to the neat little frame that hung so long in the New York baseball office—it contained the canceled $10,000 check which the club had paid the Reds for the great Cy Seymour. Pride had placed it there.

Playing on Band Will Bring Trips

(By NEA Service)

NEW YORK, March 17.—Playing on a college band doesn't bring any great amount of fame, at least not compared to that won by fellows on the gridiron, basketball court or baseball lot. The band is only a sort of side issue, as it were.

But from now on its is expected that places on the band at Harvard, Yale and Princeton will be more widely sought than was the case in the past.

For the "Big Three" has announced that in the future each band, 60 men strong, will receive free transportation to the annual Harvard-Yale-Princeton football games and that they will also be allotted seats without charge whatsoever.
