BAREE, SON OF KAZAN By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

Copyright, 1917, by Doubleday, Page & Co. "BAREE, SON OF KAZAN," a Vitaphone Picture, With Wolf, the War Dog, is an Adaptation of This Story

(Continued) THE next morning Bush McTaggart heard the clanking of a chain when he was still a good quarter of a mile from the "nest." Was it a lynx? Was it a fisher-cat? Was it a wolf or a fox? Or was it Baree? He half ran the rest of the distance, and at last he came to where he could see, and his heart leaped into his throat when he saw he had caught his enemy. He approached, holding his rifle ready to fire if by any chance the dog should free himself. Baree lay on his side panting from exhaustion and quivering with pain. A hoarse cry of exultation burst from McTaggart's lips as he drew nearer and looked at the snow. It was packed hard for many feet about the trap-house, where Baree had struggled, and it was red with blood. The blood had come mostly from Baree's jaws. They were dripping now as he glared at his enemy. The steel jaws hidden under the snow had done their merciless work well. One of his forefeet was caught well up toward the first joint, both hind feet were caught, a fourth trap had closed on his flank, and in tearing the jaws loose he had pulled off a patch of skin half as big as McTaggart's hand. The snow told the story of his desperate fight all through the night.

as Baree twisted his tortured legs and body to keep facing him. It was a splendid vengeance. He was an engrossed in it that he did not hear the approach of snowshoes behind him. It was a voice—a man's voice—that turned him round suddenly. The man was a stranger, and he was younger than McTaggart by ten years. At least he looked no more than thirty-five or six, even with the short growth of blood beard he wore. He was of that sort that the average man would like at a glance: boyish, and yet a man; with clear eyes that looked out frankly from under the rim of his fur cap, a firm little nose, an Indian's and a face altogether that did not bear the hard lines of the wilderness. Yet McTaggart knew before he had spoken that this man was of the wilderness, that he was heart and soul a part of it. His eyes were fisher-skin. He wore a windproof coat of softly tanned caribou skin, belted at the waist with a long sash and Indian fringed. The inside of the coat was furred. He was traveling on the long, slender bush-country snowshoes, his pack, strapped over the shoulders, was small and compact; he was carrying his rifle in a cloth jacket. And from cap to snowshoes he was travel-worn. McTaggart, at a guess, would have said he had travelled a thousand miles in the last few weeks. It was not this man's strange, war-like appearance and chilling fear up his back, but the sudden fear that in some strange way a whisper of the truth might have found its way down into the south—the truth of what had happened on the Gray Linn—and that this travel-worn stranger was under his care that he could hear the clank of the traps and see the fresh blood drip instant it was almost a terror that possessed him, and he stood mute. The stranger had uttered only an amazed exclamation before. Now he said, with his eyes on Baree. "God save us, but you've got the poor devil in a right proper mesh, haven't you?" There was something in the voice that reassured McTaggart. It was not a suspicious voice, and he saw that the stranger was more interested in the captured animal than in himself. He drew a deep breath. "A trap robber," he said. The stranger was staring still more closely at Baree. He thrust his gun stock downward in the snow and drew nearer to him. "God save us again—a dog!" he exclaimed. Fears behind, McTaggart was watching the man with the eyes of a ferret. "Yes, a dog," he answered. "A wild dog, half wolf at least. He's robbed me of a thousand dollars' worth of fur this winter." The stranger snatched himself before Baree, with his mittened hands resting on his knees, and his white teeth gleaming in a half smile. "You poor devil!" he said sympathetically. "So you're a trap robber, eh? An entire's! And—the Police have got you! And—God save us once more—they haven't played you a very square game!" (To be continued)
