

WAR ON FAITH IS HELD NOT MODERN BY MR. MORROW

"The Golden Rule, the greatest of all economic principles, cannot be practical except in a regenerated heart," said William Morrow, member of the legislative council of South Australia, in his commencement address to the 35 graduating students of Eugene Bible university last night at the Christian church.

"The man right with God," the speaker continued, "and you begin to put him right with society. You create a spirit that most follow right down through all the relations of life, politically, economically and socially.

"So essentially is Christianity bound up with life, it is not surprising that the old faith is under fire. They tell us that it has become out of date and should be cast into the crucible to be made over.

"But do not think that this protest against the old faith is modern," the speaker went on emphatically, "You have only to look at history to see that the only peculiar thing about the present movement is that it is so much like other movements since the birth of Christianity. It is as ancient as the old faith it seeks to overthrow. It only differs from movements in the past in that today men seek to overthrow the faith under the cloak of religion.

"It is indeed difficult to estimate the importance of the present occasion. Life is always challenging men and women to strive for the best in life, but few are prepared to accept. So we give our hearty congratulations to those here tonight who have prepared to add their fellow creatures. I shall ever pray that as they go to their life work their success here will be small compared to the greater success in the bigger world."

A brief talk was given by Dean John Straub of the University of Oregon, in reminiscence of early history of Dean Sanderson's work in Eugene.

An organ recital by Mary E. Steverson opened, after which J. S. McCallum of Seattle delivered the benediction. The Coronation choir of the university, and the Happy Harmony quartet furnished musical selections. Diplomas were conferred by Dean E. C. Sanderson, following the address of Mr. Morrow, and the service closed with a benediction by Professor E. M. Patterson.

NAVY RECRUITING OFFICER IN CITY

Eugene is doing its share toward contributing young men for service in the United States navy, said L. B. Swails of Portland, recruiting officer from the Portland office, who arrived in Eugene today. On his last trip to Eugene a month ago, Mr. Swails signed up three local boys, and from the inquiries he has received indications are that several more will join the navy on this visit.

Mr. Swails has quarters at the Osburn hotel, where he will answer questions or furnish information as to the navy advantages or navy movements. Service in the navy now offers free training of college grade in a choice of 33 trades, and is but another way of permitting a young man to earn his way through college under direction of Uncle Sam, the officer states. The motto has been changed now to "Join the navy and show the world," according to Mr. Swails.

FIRE CHIEF MAY ATTEND MEETING

Invitation to W. E. Nusbaum, chief of the Eugene fire department, to attend the annual convention of fire chiefs of Oregon at Forest Grove June 8 to 10, has been received by Mayor E. B. Parks from Will Moore, state fire marshal.

The convention will be followed this year by the school of instruction by the Portland fire department under direction of Chief Holden, the announcement says. Chief Nusbaum attended the convention last year at Corvallis, at which Tom Graham conducted the instruction classes, and it is believed the council will provide the money for sending the Eugene chief again to the state convention this year.

L. E. Simmons, chairman of the fire and water committee of the city council, has filed a petition in Judge Gilmore's office for permission to install three dozen fire hydrants, to augment the present fire plugs in use by the city.

Many Tourists on Lists of Chamber

Cars from other states registered at the Eugene chamber of commerce during the month of May totaled 237, according to a report completed today. Illinois, Missouri, Arizona, and Minnesota were among the tourist car listings registered during May.
