

The FLAPPER WIFE by Beatrice Burton

... had never been interested in her employers when she had worked, except as employees. She was sure of that.

"Miss Briggs didn't come into the house," Hangchild said. "She paid the taxi driver, and went away. He and I got Mr. Gregory upstairs, and put him on his bed. . . . Oh, man! what do you think is the matter with him?"

Hangchild was almost in tears. "Oh, nothing much, but the flu," Gloria answered. "He's had it twice this winter, and he gets right over it. He'll be all right in a day or two."

"I tried to telephone you all over town," the maid went on. "I phoned Mrs. Seymour, and Mrs. Gall, and Mrs. Hough, and Mr. Gregory's mother. . . ."

"Don't ever do it again!" Gloria cried sharply. "I'm usually down town shopping, so it's no use trying to get me by phone, anyway. . . ."

"Just what I told him he'd have if he didn't take better care of himself," he remarked dryly. "It's pneumonia. I think I'd better telephone Mrs. O'Hara right away. She's the best pneumonia nurse in this town."

Gloria stood like a statue in the middle of the room. In a dream of a nightmare, she heard Dr. John call Mrs. O'Hara, and send a taxi for her.

"She listened to him ordering things from the drug store. . . . camouflaged all cotton, brandy. . . . And all at once, it was brought home to Gloria why it was that Dr. John couldn't go with Max to all the parties and dances. . . ."

"Now, then, Gloria, the best thing you can do is to move all your things out of this room! And I want you to stay out, yourself!" Dr. John said sharply.

"Gloria gave a nervous little laugh. "No need to ask me to stay out of this room," she said. "I'm frightened to death of sick people. . . ."

RE-ELECT JOHN EVANS

Few, if any, will question the difficulty of the problems that have confronted the Board of Education in the administration of the affairs of the district during the past year. Crowded conditions in the schools, limited funds for the operation and maintenance of the system, together with an extensive building program, have been matters of serious concern. It is highly fitting that a tribute be paid to the members of the teaching staff for the efficient manner in which they discharged their duties under adverse conditions. The members of the Board of Education are deserving of the highest commendation for the character of their administration. The harmony that has prevailed among the members of the Board is highly essential to harmony in school administration and should not be lost sight of by the public when voting at the election next Monday, June 15. The retention of the personnel of the board and approval of their policies can be so expressed at the polls. This election affords an opportunity to give indorsement to the Board in its entirety.
