EUGENE BOY SETS MOUNTAIN CLIMB RECORD ON TRIP

One of 35 people ever to reach the summit of Mount Robson, highest peak of the Canadian Rockies, Don M. Woods, son of "Capt." Lee Roy Woods, 1333 Beech street, has just returned from a three week's trip in the northern Dominion and a 10-day hiking and mountain climbing trip in the Olympic- and western Washington archipelago.

Mount Robson, next to Mount McKinley in Alaska, is said to be the hardest ascent to make on the North American continent. There are other peaks that have never been climbed, adjacent to these, and Mr. Woods stated Tuesday that in his belief the ascent of these is impossible.

He is a member of the Portland Mazamas and the Eugene Outdoor club and was the first person to reach the peak of the Middle Sister this year. Mr. Woods has climbed to the top of practically every snow-capped peak in the Pacific northwest in the last few years. He has made nine trips into the Three Sisters country.

In his travels this summer, Mr. Woods covered 4000 miles by various methods of travel, namely: Train 2115, private automobile 1265, foot 302 into state, 292 and 240 feet, July 28, and Lynx Mt., 10,471 feet, July 28.

Robson has been climbed four different years only he states, first in 1913 by three people, next in 1921 by two people, and in 1924 by 25 people and lastly in 1928 by the party of five, of which Mr. Woods was a member.

In the four ascents, only 45 people have set foot on Robson's uninviting icy summit. The climb of Robson required 21 1/2 hours of almost continuous traveling for the round trip from the high camp, at an elevation of 8300 feet.

Ice Wall Baffling—"The most difficult part of the ascent of Robson is the 110 foot ice wall at 10,500 feet elevation," said Mr. Woods, who is now in Eugene on a hanging glacier, with a sheer drop below it of perhaps 100 feet, and the valley of the mountain dropping away from this point for probably 5000 feet. "The summit is reached by the party to gain the summit. The original climbing party was one of 15 members, but ten turned back at the ice wall, the remaining five proceeded to the summit. These five, besides myself, were: Hans and Helme Fuhrer, Swiss guides from Jasper Park lodge; Norman Clyde, a well known Sierra climber, left the Chicago club and hiker, having climbed the Matterhorn in Switzerland. "Rusty" was the name of the man to reach the summit of Robson.

"The next most interesting of these climbs was Mt. Geikie. Our party was the fourth to make the summit, there having been many unsuccessful attempts made previously. From the camp, at 7200 feet elevation, the climb was almost entirely rock climbing, and the round trip from camp required 24 hours. Geikie is probably as dangerous a climb as Robson, if not more so, although there is no ice wall to contend with. The other three climbs made were quite ordinary, and the party was composed of a snow climb all the way, while Edith Cavell and Lynx were almost entirely rock climbs."

"The first eight days' camp was located in the Tomin valley. Jasper Park. The camp was then moved to Robson Pass on the shores of Lake Adolphus, in Mt. Robson Park. Four night camps were made on the way into and out of the mountain, with 12 days in the main camp on the lake."

Go to Olympics—Mr. Woods, with two Portland Mazamas companions, left the Sierra camp three days early, going by train to Vancouver, B. C. "For then traveling by boat to Victoria, B. C., by boat to Port Angeles, Wash., and by stage to Sol Duc hot springs, on the north side of the Olympics. Here they were joined by a fourth, Portland Mazama, and with 60 pound packs, started for their Olympic jaunt on Aug. 2. Three days were taken to hike into the camp on the moraine of Blue Glacier, a distance of 30 miles. Sunday, Aug. 5, they climbed the west peak of Olympus via the Blue Glacier. The elevation is approximately 8100 feet.

"The Olympic peaks are not high in elevation," he continued, "but they have on their slopes some immense and beautiful glaciers, due of course to the fact that the precipitation during the year amounts to about 250 inches, which makes the snowfall on the slopes of Olympus something over 300 feet during the year. Olympic climbing compares very favorably with any section of the northwest, both rock and snow and ice climbing. The south side climb of Mt. Olympus from Elwha basin is a much easier trip than the trip to the summit of Mt. Rainier."

Mr. Woods' party of four met the Mazama party of 33, who were climbing Mt. Rainier, at the main objective of their two weeks outing in the Olympics. It just happened that the two parties picked out the same Sunday to climb. Both parties returned to the camp on Monday, Aug. 13, and the Mazama party had climbed, and on the south side of the mountain. Next day the return to main camp in Elwha basin and following day a day well deserved rest.

Climbs Seattle Peak—Next day 23 Mazamas set out for Mt. Rainier, 14,167 feet. They reached a peak some distance from the main peak and decided due to the lateness of the hour and size of the party, not to attempt to take the peak. They returned to the main camp and for volunteers to go with him to the real summit of Seattle, but could get no one to go so went alone and after making the summit of Seattle reached the main camp on Monday, Aug. 13, and the Mazama party. At Aberdeen, after a good dinner, the sleeping cars were boarded and the party awoke next morning in Portland.

In speaking of the glories of the Canadian Rockies and the Olympics, Mr. Woods said that there is really nothing in the Cascades of Oregon or Washington to anywhere near compare with them for real mountain scenery. He speaks with authority, having climbed all the five major Washington Cascade peaks last summer and the five major Oregon Cascade peaks the summer of 1926.

"Our Cascades are similar to a backbone, one continuous ridge with the high peaks extending higher into the sky than the rest of the ridge. The Canadian Rockies, however, are made up of peaks over 10,000 feet in elevation," Mr. Woods added. "From the high camp on Mt. Robson, 62 main peaks were counted and this represented only half the horizon, as the other half was shut out by the bulk of Robson itself, upon whose slopes the camp was made. This view was restricted to probably 30 miles to the northward, to the Columbia level and its immense mountain peaks. Farther to the north was still hundreds of peaks, too distant to see from Robson because of the haze."

In defense of the Cascades, which Mr. Woods loves dearly, he said, "The heavy timber and beautiful mountain meadows of our own Cascades were greatly missed in the Canadian Rockies, although some pretty meadows were seen. But as a climbing field, the Canadian Rockies are not surpassed by any section of the entire world. Switzerland included, unless it be the Himalayas of Central Asia."

of physical education. He has taught at coaching schools in summer sessions in Oregon and California. In the five years he has coached varsity basketball at Oregon, the university teams have won 94 games and lost 19. In regular conference games he has won 39 and lost 10. The first year he was here the basketball team came up from last place to finish the season in third position. Since that time the teams have either been in first or second place every year. They have won two northwest championships, and last year finished second.

In baseball, he has put forth representative teams every year, and this year Oregon won the championship of the northern division of the Pacific Coast Intercollegiate conference. It was the first championship for an Oregon baseball team since 1920.

Reinhart's frosh football teams have consistently defeated Oregon State college and University of Washington teams, these teams representing practically their only competition.

In addition to university coaching and instructing activities, Reinhart is coach of the Willamette valley baseball league team from Eugene, which finished this year in second place, giving way only to Bend.

New Insurance Offices Opening

Eugene gained another business enterprise when the Northwestern Mutual Fire Association which has its headquarters in Seattle has established a branch office at 801 Willamette st., with H. C. Wood in charge as manager, assisted by R. L. De Vanez. Mr. Wood has been here several years in the real estate business and previous to that had followed the insurance business in eastern Oregon.

"The office is equipped to give prompt and immediate service," said Mr. Wood. "By doing business with the branch office you are not dealing with an agency but direct with the Association. The Eugene branch is now operating and extends an invitation to the general public in Eugene and tributary towns to call upon them for any information that they might wish regarding insurance."

What Will you do

When your Children Cry for It

There is hardly a household that hasn't heard of Castoria! At least five million homes are never without it! If there are children in your family, there's almost daily need of its comfort. And any night may find you very thankful there's a bottle in the house. Just a few drops, and that colic or constipation is relieved; or diarrhea checked. A vegetable product; a baby remedy meant for young folks. Castoria is about the only thing you have ever heard doctors advise giving to infants. Stronger medicines are dangerous to a tiny baby; however harmless they may be to grown-ups. Good old Castoria! Remember the name, and remember to buy it. It may spare you a sleepless, anxious night. It is always ready, always safe to use; in emergencies, or for everyday ailments. Any hour of the day or night that baby becomes fretful, or restless, Castoria was never more popular with mothers than it is today. Every druggist has it.

He did his best but got two stations at once, one of which was broadcasting setting up exercises and the other the recipe. This is what he took down: "Hands on hips, place one cup of flour on the shoulder, raise knees and lepress toes and mix thoroughly in one-half cup of milk. Repeat six times."

"Cool as a Cucumber!" Next Saturday is the date for the climb to Collier Glacier which is being sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce. It's only a three mile hike from Frog Camp. Seems like a tenderfoot should be able to make this.

This has been a fine summer, some warm weather, of course, but a person can keep pretty comfortable if he dresses in light weight clothes and then keeps them clean. Cultivate Your Credit

(This is the sixth of a series of advertisements on the value of credit, and ways and means of securing it.) FIRST, then, credit is based on honesty. But, second, it is based on ability. It isn't enough to intend to pay when payment is due. A man must be able to pay. That means business ability. It means good judgment, courage, efficient management, experience, skill, persistence—all the qualities that make for success, applied to some particular business.

Credit is built, usually, little by little. Each time a man borrows money of the bank, and repays it promptly, he has added to the foundation on which his credit is erected. Let him fail, but once, to meet his obligation when due, and he has injured his credit just that much.

Remember that a banker is not suspicious because he wants to be—nor liked to be—because he has to be.
