The hero and the heroine are Americans in the state of Chinora, where a plot is concocted to marry the heroine who is a niece of a rich oil well owner, to the impoverished nephew of a down-at-the-heels count. LUCKY WORKER GETS BUTTON
Rather Odd Way by Which Employer Selects Longshoremen

The ancient game of "Button, button, who has the button?" is played by serious groups of men daily along the New York water front. A small crowd may be seen gathered about a wagon from which a man distributes the buttons. The men who get the buttons win.

The man in the wagon with the buttons, as a matter of fact, is choosing workmen, and finds the button game a convenient scheme for making his choice. The plan is commonly used in selecting longshoremen to work cargoes on the ships. At an early hour longshoremen hunting jobs gather about the dock entrances. The men who needs workers takes his position in a wagon, or perhaps on a box, and calls for workmen. The crowd gathers about him.

From his position the employer can see the face and figures of the men. From long experience he can tell at a glance which men best serve his purpose. He makes up his mind in a moment's inspection. To signal the man and get him out of the crowd would require time and lead to complications. He merely flips compartments; and when the weak nobles plan to abduct their prey, the performers come to their rescue and stage one of the most thrilling mob fights we have ever seen. With the odds fifty to one against them, they liberate the tigers and the lions.

In his most recent Western picture, "The Fighting Spirit," coming to the Rex this week, Mix is required to grow a beard. He did this and, as he says, "the growing wasn't so bad, but the elimination was." A sharp razor didn't help me much, he asserts. It was a case of lather and pull, strop and stroke again, and then stroke some more. And when the job was completed, Mix says, his face felt like a piece of raw beef looks.

Johnny Jones, the 12-year-old actor, who is featured in Booth Tarkington's "Edgar" stories, is a genuine American boy, just the type of youth Mr. Tarkington had in mind when he wrote these delightful boyhood comedies. On the legitimate stage, Johnny played in "The Barter," "Sally Jane," and "Nju." On the screen he has played in "The Walls of Jericho," "The Shepherd of the Hills," etc. "Edgar, the Detective," the latest of the Booth Tarkington stories to be released, will be shown at the Rex next week.

Professor Bell a Radio Fan
Finding the telephone, his own invention, a source of annoyance to him, Alexander Graham Bell had it removed from his home. With the radio there is a difference. It seems, for Mr. Bell, now seventy-five years old, is said never to tire of "listening in" and experimenting with the new device. There are few more ardent enthusiasts, declare his friends.
