

At City Auto Camp

Tales of Those Who Tour

Wreathed in smiles 'neath his bright blue cap was the face of H. H. (Tex) Parker, superintendent of the auto camp, for last night was one of his "big nights." Over 60 cars were comfortably parked, and with many of them promising to stay over Sunday, he expects the newcomers tomorrow to swell the enrollment to a record breaker. Such a heavy registration so late in the season shows conclusively that the fame of the beauty, service and cleanliness of the camp has traveled widely. Credit for this should be shared with Henry Kinsinger, the keeper of the grounds, declares Mr. Parker, for it is "Henry" who keeps the park so clean and neat.

The soft night winds were lulling M. E. Service and his wife and little daughter to sleep in a quiet little camp on the outskirts of Minneapolis, Minnesota, when—crash! and they were rudely awakened by what they thought at first was an earthquake. They crawled out of their car in which they were sleeping, and discovered that a limb of a giant oak tree had fallen on them completely wrecking the top, the wind shield, and bending the bodies of the car in several places. "There must be a special providence that watches over the tourist," says Mr. Service, "for though our car was wrecked, we weren't scratched." The Services are from Dayton, Ohio, where in his business dealings his motto is "Service, always with a smile." A few days will be spent in Lane county before venturing southward.

"Let's get together, Oregon," says W. H. Russell, from Pasadena, California. "We'll trade you half of our business for half of your wonderful country, your prosperous farms, and your matchless scenery, and then Oregon and California will have the world beat." He declares that Oregon is the greatest state in the union for everything, but what it needs is boosters. "You're learning," he declares, "and it won't be long until thousands of settlers will be living in Oregon, due to the efforts of real 'live wires' that are now at work in this country. Mr. Russell wishes to see more of what is offered around here, so he will spend a few days looking things over."

"By all means, hold that big fair out here in 1925!" emphatically stated Edward Larking, who is touring through Oregon from Topeka, Kansas. "It will get thousands of people out here, and believe me, when they see what Oregon has to offer, they'll be glad, very glad, that they made the trip." Mr. Larking regrets that his business interests in Topeka will only permit him to tarry a day or so. He'll be back, though, in 1925, and expects to see the greatest fair the world has ever known.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Schafer were enjoying ice cream cones with their children last night, but paused long enough to say the Eugene was the most inviting and homelike spot they had been in since they left home in Sandusky, Ohio. "Fact is," says Mr. Schafer, "we're strongly tempted to come out here to live!"

G. R. Sowle and family have come out from Cloverdale, New York, and have traveled over 5200 miles since May 31. So ideal has been their life that they are loth to think of the idea of ever going back to house-keeping. "I'm going to fix up a tent camp here," says Mr. Sowle. They expect to reach New York about October 15, after a tour of the southern states.

Comforts and conveniences that border on tourist luxury are the rule at the Goshen hotel, where the out from Cleveland, Ohio, are very interesting in his "Pullman" trailer, a compact outfit that unfolds into a neat bedroom, with curtained windows, electric lights, and two very comfortable double beds. And more interesting are his two attractive daughters, Janet, age 14, and Maryann, age 19. Maryann has not yet decided what college she will enter in the fall, while Janet will enter high school at Cleveland.

Others who enjoyed the comfort and hospitality of the park were D. E. Warren and his mother and brother from Fullerton, California; Mrs. T. B. Horn and son from Pasadena, Cal.; John F. Brill, court reporter from Spokane, Wash.; Charles DeRoux and family from Portland, and C. B. Andrews and family, also from Portland.

SENATE PASSES LONG PENDING TARIFF BILL

completed within a month and the same view was entertained by senate leaders.

Bill May Die in Conference There still was gossip at the capital that the bill might get into deadlock conference and there die; but majority leaders declared the conferees would report the measure, out and that it probably would be ready for the President next month.

The general judgment of leaders, however, is that it would be rewritten in conference. If so it will be the third rewriting since it passed the house on July 21, 1921.

This measure, the first Republican tariff to be written in this session will be even a greater storm center than the Payne-Aldrich bill of 1909. From the start Democrats assailed it in full force as even higher than the 1909 law and as the debate developed opposition to individual sections began to find expression on the Republican side.

Soon after senate consideration began on April 20 the finance committee majority which had labored with the legislation for eight months began to rewrite many of the rates, occasionally the senate added to their work by direct vote with a result that as passed the bill differed widely from that reported to the senate last April 11.

McCumber Estimates Revenues Chairman McCumber of the finance committee, who plotted the measure through the senate, said in a formal statement tonight, reviewing the provisions, it was estimated that it would yield more than $400,000,000 in revenue during the first year it was in operation. This is half a million more than has been yielded any tariff in the history of the country.

"The application of the rates in this act to the imports that will come in during the first months of its life," said Senator McCumber, "is estimated to show a lower average equivalent ad valorem rate of duty than under any recent Republican tariff."

and other agricultural products are given greater protection than any other tariff, manufacturers have been given a lower compensatory rate of duty than in any previous protective tariff bill.

"The result of this tariff is that every industry in the country is fairly and justly protected. The duties, however, are not made prohibitive."

Summing up, Senator McCumber said the bill as passed by the senate will:

"First—Insure employment for American labor and payment of a living wage.

"Second—Permit the establishment of continuance of industries vital to the welfare of this nation.

"Third—Protect alike the producer of raw materials and the manufacturer.

"Fourth—Permit readjustment of rates without general tariff revision, to meet changing economic conditions.

"Fifth—Require the ascertainment and submission to congress of facts affecting competitive conditions."

Democrats Score New Measure Senator Simmons, North Carolina and Senator Walsh, Massachusetts, chief among the Democratic leaders in the tariff fight, prescribed a different picture in a formal statement. They described the measure as:

"One of the most abominable legislative acts of an American congress."

"The toll the American people must pay under the operation of this bill is stupendous," their statement said. "It will reach into the billions. Foodstuffs, clothing, practically all of the very essentials and necessities of life, bear the highest duties ever before levied and all of this while people are demanding reductions in the cost of living and capital is deflating wages."

"Experts of the government estimate that if the increased tariff duties, levied on fresh meats, cereals, potatoes and beans are effective in increasing prices, these duties alone will amount to an increase of $1,250,000,000 in the cost of living. Indeed, it is notorious that the working and poorer classes are especially to suffer in consequence of this legislation."

Pork Barrel Charges Made "In view of the indefensible, scandalous, selfish, pork-barrel character of this legislation how much longer can our law making body retain the confidence and respect of the American public? It is time for a political revolution against such methods and practices. This bill has made the tariff more than a political issue. It has become a great moral issue."

"This bill takes billions of dollars from the pockets of the public and distributes this vast sum to those who enjoy sufficient influence to receive an invitation to thrust their hands into the plunder pile."

"The pity of it is the abandonment of the century old tariff principles by a great political party. Senators from manufacturing, agricultural, mining, steel and metal states may be expected hereafter by the old line log-rolling methods and pork barrel practices, regardless of party affiliations, to dictate the rates which the favored industries in their respective states demand."

"If the method which has succeeded at this time continues it will not be long before the old party labels in our law making bodies disappear and blocs, agricultural, manufacturing, labor, banking and social, are substituted."

Some one in the crowd then asked how the new party would act on the compulsory school bill.

"I do not know what the majority will do, but I'm personally in favor of it and the secretary and Mr. Gifford, who are the committee to call the convention, are in favor of it," explained Chairman Richards.

Mr. Gifford then made a direct statement that the endorsement of the school bill would be one of the planks in the platform.

An announcement that the convention would be called in ten days was followed by adjournment.
