association by its refusal to grant an appropriation of $25,000 for its work. He brought out the point that $200,000 was received each year by the state from the gasoline tax from tourists brought here through the efforts of the association. He also cited the increased hotel business as an example of what might be expected by increased tourist traffic.

"First," said Mr. Cuthbert, "sell Oregon to the people of Oregon. Sell the tourist possibilities to the people of Oregon for one-half of the state is suitable only for tourist trade. Then sell Oregon to the outsider. Sell what there is in Oregon, not just the name of the state."

A campaign to advertise Oregon was advocated so that people might hear of some other place than California. Mr. Cuthbert stated that while he was in California, one out of every three people told him that they intended to visit Oregon during the summer by rail or by auto.

Writing to friends outside the state and to business associates in other places was urged. Several points he brought out were the business opportunities, Oregon as a place to live, the scenery, the sports and the climate. He ended up by saying, "There is no other place where life is so worth living. If you believe it, it is so."
