THREE CITY MEASURES

At the special city election next week, three charter amendments are to be voted on. One is highly important, because it concerns the city's credit. Another is moderately important, because it seeks to remedy the present procedure under which the individual, if he is shrewd enough, may escape paying for improvements to his property and compel the public to pay instead.

The first amendment—that providing for a refunding bond issue—has been discussed at considerable length already in these columns. The city has a large warrant debt, and these warrants draw six per cent interest. The warrants can be converted into bonds at around four and a half per cent, effecting a very considerable saving.

If better business methods had been followed in the past, this warrant debt would not have accumulated. But that is water over the dam. The warrants are outstanding, and if they are not refunded the city's credit will suffer and if the city's credit suffers taxes will rise out of proportion to results achieved.

The reassessment ordinance seeks simply to make it impossible for a property owner to escape payment for sidewalks or sewers because of some technical error in the procedure and thus compel the general public to pay for the benefits he has received.

but big business is back and receives a hearty welcome. The significance of these events is this: Co-operative marketing is not a cure-all—not a panacea that will remedy automatically all the ills from which the farmer suffers. There is a tendency among the politicians to hail it as such. They see dissatisfaction written large upon the farming areas, and they arise in their places and say impressively: "Don't you worry any longer; we are going to give you co-operative marketing and after that everything will be all right."

Successful co-operative marketing is not a thing that can be given by the politicians. It can not be accomplished by passing a law. Real co-operation, including marketing, is based upon the hard-headed business sense of the co-operators, and if this hard-headed business sense is lacking co-operative marketing will fall—just as it failed in North Dakota. The country is littered with instances proving this fundamental truth.

Co-operative marketing is not a political issue, and the politicians who are offering it as infallible, something good for man and beast, are simply talking through their hats.

are a number of assessments against Mr. Smith's property. He has protested these before the council, claiming they are invalid. Should he be correct, he can defeat the assessments in court and escape payment. We cannot now reassess this property.

The question you will vote on next Tuesday is "shall I pay for Smith's sidewalk, sewer, or pavement or shall Smith?" Portland, Salem, Albany, Corvallis, Medford and almost every sizable town in Oregon has this charter provision.

I will make brief mention tomorrow of the fifteen per cent amendment.

Omit Rough Foods in Bowel Illness When the Intestinal Membranes Are Irritated a Person Should Eat Nothing Which Prolongs That Condition.

DR. ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D. (United States Senator from New York) Former Commissioner of Health, New York City

Here is another request from a sufferer with "mucous colitis," asking that I suggest a diet. She wants to know what are the chances for recovery.

This particular person has some skin disease which may be caused by the symptoms of the disease.

The particular skin trouble mentioned—eczema nodosum—is likely to be caused by mucous colitis.

It must be admitted, however, that any redness and disturbance of the skin might be seriously aggravated by any intestinal disturbance, including mucous colitis.

One of the first things to do in the treatment of a chronic skin disease is to get the digestive organs into normal condition.

Unless they are made to act properly it will be extremely difficult to clear up the skin.

Mucous colitis is an inflammation of the lining membrane of the large intestine. Strains and masses of mucus are expelled from the bowel.

This ailment is associated with nervousness and run-down condition. Hysterical persons are likely to have it.

The attacks come on suddenly. There may be colic-like pains. These may be so very cutting and severe as to cause great anxiety to the family. They may fear appendicitis or something else more serious than mucous colitis.

It is difficult to draw the line between mucous colitis and inflammation of the large intestine, a form of "enteritis," as the doctors call it. However, it is not important to discuss differences. The dietary treatment for both is practically the same.

You will find long lists of foods some of which may be taken, and some of which must be avoided. I am not going to give you any such list. In my opinion, if food is tolerated at all, any food can be given which is free from fibre, husks and irritating indigestible parts.

Just think about foods: The cereals, unless they are carefully prepared, contain the outer covering of the grain. Vegetables like squash and turnip, contain more or less fibre. Beans and peas have the indigestible and irritating skin and capsule.

Every food given the victim of mucous colitis, during the attack, certainly, should be strained. It should be put through a fine colander to take out husk, capsule and fibre.

The cereals should be strained. The vegetables should be strained. The cooked fruits should be strained.

Keep out of the diet everything which is likely to scratch, scour or otherwise irritate the bowel lining. This is the secret of feeding a patient with enteritis or mucous colitis.

BOY TELLS OF STEALING HARRY McEIROY CONVICTED AT MEDFORD (By The Associated Press) MEDFORD, Ore., Dec. 8.—A little drama that reminded spectators of Charles Dickens' character Fagin was enacted in circuit court today when Harry McEiroy was convicted of larceny by a jury after Richard Dunn, 13, of Oakland, Cal., told of his wanderings with McEiroy, whom the lad said had encouraged him to commit thefts.

With boyish frankness, Dunn told his story. He started out in the world six weeks ago, taking an automobile from the streets of a suburb of Oakland. He drove to San Jose and met McEiroy, who was employed in a shooting gallery. Dunn had $115 and bought breakfast for McEiroy and a boy they called "the white haired kid." The trio then started for Reno, Nevada.

At Gold Hill, Young Dunn testified McEiroy drove the stolen automobile up to a garage and at the suggestion of McEiroy he left the car while gas was being purchased and took $19 from the cash register. The lad said he gave the money to McEiroy, along with a number of checks, in a pocket-book, and that after leaving Gold Hill the pair drove up Sardinia creek.

McEiroy tore up the checks, it was testified. Gold Hill citizens pursued and overtook the car and captured the pair.

Late today authorities had not decided what disposition was to be made of the boy.

Fagan, district president of the miners' union said a truck driver for the company drove his machine into a crowd of men and women, killing one woman, while the sheriff and company officials declared the driver lost control when persons in the crowd threw stones at the machine.

Color Discrimination One Mother Says I want my children to distinguish colors rapidly, and to know shades of color. When color sense is lacking or defective it is often-times developed by training. I have a color chart fastened on the wall plainly marked with names. If I buy sewing silk or yarn I have the children name the color I have chosen, and if any dispute about color comes up they consult the chart. (Copyright, 1925, Associated Editors, Inc.)
