IN THE DAY'S NEWS

Eugene's building permits again lead all cities of the Pacific Northwest of under 100,000 population. That has become so much an established custom in the past two or three years that it no longer arouses comment.

More significant, perhaps, is the fact that in November Oregon's seven principal cities did nearly a million dollars more building than Washington's 11 leading cities. And remember, please, that Washington's 11 include three cities of metropolitan rank. Portland's permits in November were two and a half times Seattle's.

For years we have been hearing the old mournful song that Oregon is a backward sister while Washington is right up and coming. A new day is here and Oregon is stepping out in front with the best of them.

The newspapers and the national magazines these days are full of vivid advertising of Florida and California. Florida is doing most of her own, but the western railroads are telling the world in no uncertain terms of the wonders of California.

With one notable exception, the railroads are doing little to advertise the north Pacific Coast. The exception is the Hill group, which for three years has carried on an enormous advertising campaign in behalf of the Pacific Northwest.

Up here in Oregon we admire California, but we become a little resentful at times of the manner in which the railroads sing her praises while ignoring us. For that reason we can appreciate the more fully the splendid publicity given to the Northwest by the so-called Hill lines.

Lane county shares with Grant the distinction of having the largest national forest area in Oregon. Lane county's national forest acreage is 1,362,438, and Grant's is 1,378,091. Wallowa county is a reasonably close third with 1,120,913 acres.

From this vast domain Lane county received last year the munificent sum of $15,041.67. Grant received $21,824.06, and Wallowa $16,523.25. Compare these insignificant totals with the sums that would have been received if these lands were on the tax rolls and could be taxed like other property.

It is not intended to convey here the idea that the national forests should be turned over to private ownership. That is an old and bitter feud that has been fought out to a definite conclusion.

But these figures of acreage and return are offered for what they are worth for the enlightenment of narrow-visioned easterners who complain that they are putting up out of their pockets for the building of roads in the West, and who assert that the system is all wrong and ought to be stopped.

If the government will pay to us each year a sum equivalent to that which we lose by reason of government ownership of land within our borders, we will cheerfully relinquish any claim to special consideration in the building of roads.

Keep your ears open and you will have poured into them sooner or later a tale about the good old times and how much better life was formerly than now.

The next time you hear that tale, ask the teller of it if he knows the average span of life in Shakespeare's time. Probably he will not. For his information, you can tell him that it was 33½ years.

Thirty-three and one-half years the average man's span of life! At 33, in these supposedly decadent times, men and women are just coming into the full flower of their usefulness. When a man dies at 67—double the average life in Shakespeare's day—we are extremely apt to say that he was carried off before his time.

This very great increase in the averge person's life is the result of advancement in medical science, plus a more widely extended knowledge of how to take care of ourselves. Probably there has been an equal advance in other fields of human endeavor. The "good old days" were never half as good as these modern days.

Mary Garden, back from overseas, sings loudly the praises of the Riviera—that sun-kissed strip of Mediterranean coast where Europe goes to play and to spend. After listening to the details, as she tells them, we stand ready to do a little praising on our own account.

The lovely—for she is lovely, as well as tuneful—Mary relates that all summer she has been basking in the sun's bright rays and storing up health the while. The basking, it further appears, has been done "in the altogether."

Pressed for particulars by the curious reporters, she added that it was her custom to row out into the blue bay of Mentone and there do her stint of basking in even scantier attire than the chorus at a strictly modern musical show.

What a whale of an idea there is there for the Florida real estate boomers! They've tried about everything else down around the shores of Biscayne bay, and it must be admitted that the results are at least so-so. But if they can get this business of basking going really good, there won't be standing room left on the wave-washed strands from Jacksonville to Key West and prices of lots within spyglass range will soar to new and dizzy heights.

Early Days In Eugene

(From the Morning Register, December 12, 1906)

Gordon C. Moores was last night unanimously elected captain of the University of Oregon football team for next season.

The Carnegie library in Eugene is one of the very pleasantest places in the city to spend a spare hour or two. Mrs. Adelaide Lilly, the librarian says it is liberally patronized by young men and women.

The committee from the council appointed to confer with Charles F. Croner about his team went in a body to Mr. Croner and pursuaded him to accept the job of taking care of the team and driving it to fires.

Trainer W. L. Hayward will not go to Portland as previously announced and train the Multnomah athletes, but will stay at the university.

The deed from L. N. Roney to the Eagles lodge for the transfer of 40 feet fronting on Willamette street near Fifth has been passed.

George and Charles Moody came in from McKenzie Bridge yesterday to meet their mother, Mrs. Wilson, who arrived from Baker City.

Daily Lesson In English

Words Often Misused: Don't say "he referred to us going away." Say "our going away."

Often Mispronounced: Stolid. Pronounce the o as in "of," not as in "no."

Often Misspelled: Recommend. One c, two m's.

Synonyms: Destiny, destination, predestination, fate, fatality, decree.

Word Study: "Use a word three times and it is yours." Let us increase our vocabulary by mastering one word each day. Today's word: Permeate; to penetrate; to saturate. "The odor of roses permeated the air."

CURRENT CATCHES MAN

DEATH NARROWLY ESCAPED BY ALBANY RESIDENT

(By The Associated Press)

ALBANY, Ore., Dec. 11.—Elmer Venable, Albany business man, narrowly escaped death here today by electric shock and would have been killed had it not been for the timely action of a man named Chandler. Venable had climbed a pole to cut a guy wire that had become shorted and was endangering passersby who might touch the wire. In some manner Venable became caught on the wire and was hanging by his arms unable to release his grip because of the electric current when Chandler saw his plight. Running and leaping in the air Chandler caught Venable about the legs and hung on until his weight brought the man to the pavement. Venable's leg was broken by the fall but otherwise was not seriously injured. The wire was charged with 2300 volts on an arc light circuit.

OLYMPIA, Wash., Dec. 11.—Announcement was made late today by H. C. Johnson, supervisor of banking, that the State Bank of Pasco, which closed its doors September 8, 1925, will disburse a 50 per cent dividend about January 10.

Damages Are Awarded

DENVER, Colo., Dec. 11.—Damages of $7500 were awarded Frank C. Seeated, circulation manager of the Kansas City Star, in his libel suit against the Post Printing and Publishing company by a federal court jury here today.

Nature Warns When You Are Nervous

Get Rid of the Mental and Physical Disturbances and Any Tendency Toward Nervousness Will Soon Disappear.

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M.D.
(United States Senator from New York)
Former Commissioner of Health New York City

DR. ROYAL S. COPELAND

It is a rare day in your experience when nobody says, "I am so nervous!" No doctor ever kept his office hours without being told a long tale by somebody about nervousness.

I have before me as I write, a letter from "A Daily Reader," in Milwaukee asking "what causes nervousness and what must one do to overcome it?" She wants an article on this subject.

There are almost as many causes for nervousness as there are apples on a tree. Almost every such cause is a thing neglected, or a wrong thing done.

Loss of sleep, indigestion, worry, headache, eye strain, rheumatism, heart disease, Bright's disease, diabetis, undernourishment, discontent, self-abuse, overwork—almost all the uncomfortable things in the world may produce nervousness. Nervousness is not a disease. It is a symptom. It is merely a sign of something wrong with you. It is nature's way of warning you that you are not living as you should.

I am practical enough to know and to admit that it isn't easy and, indeed, it is not always possible to get rid of nervousness. It isn't easy to do it, because it is difficult to remove some of the causes of nervousness. It is utterly impossible sometimes to get rid of the exciting cause.

Fortunately for the distressed, a careful study of the individual is likely to determine what is wrong and then it is a simple matter to make correction of the evil.

I cannot hope to deal today with all the causes of nervousness. But I wish to tell you something about sleeplessness as a cause for nervousness. It is such a common cause that it deserves particular consideration.

You cannot feel right, or think right, or act right if you can't sleep. When you find the cause of sleeplessness and remove it, you will go far towards getting rid of nervousness.

The most common reason for not sleeping well, is some disturbance of the digestive organs. Constipation, intestinal fermentation, gas formation in the stomach, overeating, eating quantities of indigestible food and failure of digestion because of shallow breathing and lack of exercise—in this list you will be likely to find the cause of sleeplessness and, at the same time the cause of the nervousness.

The mental condition is important, but, in my opinion, the mental condition is more likely to be the product of physical causes, rather than vice versa. There is no doubt, however, that worry, unhappiness, discontent and all forms of mind consciousness are responsible for the symptoms we all call "nervousness." Get rid of the mental disturbance and the nerves will take care of themselves.

The proposed smelter at Gold Hill will soon be a reality, according to announcement that the Kelmar - Vanpet Mining company will finance the first unit of the smelter proposed by the Sunset Smelting company, organized by Gold Hill business men after the failure of the West Coast Finance company last year to finance the project.

Portland's population at the close of 1925, six years after the last decennial census, is 335,774, compared with 258,288, an increase of 30 per cent, according to a survey just completed for the Oregonian. The survey, with definitely ascertained figures of increase, is not to be classed with estimates based only upon the gain of the 1910-1920 decade.

With Christmas close at hand and raspberries and strawberries still ripening in Clackamas county, flowering plants are not to be outdone, for growing in the garden of Mrs. J. U. MOTHERS AND THEIR CHILDREN

Limit the Sugar

One Mother Says:

It is much better for children to acquire good judgment and self control in their eating habits by being put on their own responsibility early in life than to grow up under a system of punishments for breaking arbitrary rules for eating. For instance, the child who habitually wants more sugar than he should have should have his own individual shaker provided with a week's supply. He will soon learn to apportion the proper amount for each day's feeding by himself. This is infinitely better than watching every opportunity to sneak more sugar than permitted, when parental eyes are averted.

TWO ARE HURT IN WRECK

CAR HITS MEN WHO ARE HELPING STUDENTS

SALEM, Ore., Dec. 11.—W. E. Smiggs was seriously injured about the head, and Theodore Reuss sustained torn tendons of the left knee and leg, when a car driven by George Eberling of Dallas ran into them at Brun's Corner, six miles west of here, early last night. Both men are from Portland, Smiggs giving his address as 1203 Lovegren street, and Reuss as 678 Oregon street. Smiggs and Reuss were attaching a tow rope from their car to one driven by two Willamette university students, which had stalled, when the accident occurred.

Both men were brought to a hospital here. Reuss was discharged from the hospital this morning, but Smiggs will probably not be able to leave for several days.

The Origin and Operation of Skaggs Stores

Uncle Eben, mythical darky philosopher, is quoted as having said "When a man says he ain't got no enemies he's either an awful liar or else he ain't never done nothin' wuth noticin'." On another occasion the same ebony sage is supposed to have remarked that "Any time yo sticks yo haid above de tall grass somebody's gwine bounce a rock offen it." Both of which observations — whether or not they are authentic—are literally and figuratively true.

Frequently the perfect obvious is the most difficult thing to see and it is human nature to like to weave a web of mystery about outstanding successes despite the fact that a few simple, properly directed questions might dispel the mystery at any time. Particularly in the case of unusually successful commercial enterprises there are always those whose concept of their own self-interest prompts them to create and circulate rumors and whisperings that are less than half- truths or wholly false. No large concern is immune from such attacks and the question of "Who Owns Skaggs Stores?" has been the subject of much idle speculation and false report.

Skaggs stores are owned solely by the men who are actively engaged in their operation — four Skaggs brothers and the executive heads among the employees who have reached certain positions and met certain requirements. Not a dollar earned outside is or ever has been invested in this concern since its incorporation, nor are there any outstanding bonds, notes or preferred stock (which is but another way of borrowing money) and not a single share of common stock has ever been sold to anyone outside the organization.

As the second Skaggs store was financed from the earnings of the first store, so have succeeding stores been financed from the profits of the stores that preceded them. No stock in Skaggs stores has ever been offered the public or listed on any stock exchange for the reason that the heads of this firm regard all chain store stocks as highly speculative, and dependent for their earning entirely upon the ability and spirit of the management and organization back of them. To build a closely knit organization such as ours, ONE in mind, purpose, and effort, requires considerable time and more-than-ordinary understanding of the variable and human elements involved. And yet, without such an organization, the ultimate success of any chain store's venture is at least questionable, therefore, in the beginning we did not invite or permit the public to risk its money with us, and later, on the principle that a true servant is worthy of his hire, profits have gone to the producers thereof, and in direct ratio to their efforts and ability.

Some years after the opening of the first Skaggs store certain of the older personnel had accumulated various amounts of money which represented their savings since coming with the organization. This money they desired to invest in the company, and, since the heads of the concern had always believed that each man was entitled to participate in the profits to the full extent of his personal efforts, and the firm was then well established and on its way to success, arrangements were made to permit these men to buy such amounts of stock in the corporation as could be paid for strictly out of funds accumulated while in the employ of the company. No money from outside sources was permitted to be used in the purchase of stock, and only amounts in excess of annual earnings of $1500.00 were accepted, since it was considered that $1500.00 a year was the minimum amount on which a man with family could live decently.

The money thus invested by employees was used for further expansion, to increase earnings, and care for the incoming personnel who were rapidly developing to managerial capacity. Since that time, once each year, the various executives who can meet the other requirements are offered the privilege of purchasing stock on the above basis—a privilege of which they can avail themselves or not, as they see fit, since the purchase of stock in the company is in no way a condition of their employment, but rather, one of the perogatives thereof.

For this reason, whenever you meet and deal with one of the managers of the more than 300 widely scattered Skaggs stores, you have almost invariably come into contact with one of the owners whose personal and financial interests are vitally concerned with the kind of service and satisfction you receive in that store.
