BOOTH TALKS AT LANE COUNCIL MEETING

Local Men Awarded Certificates of Graduation From Scoutmasters' Course

The work among boys, like the lumbering industry, must be kept in the right, or there is danger of its being lost, was the theme of a talk by Mr. Booth at a meeting of the Lane County Council of Boy Scouts, held at the hotel last night.

Mr. Booth, who is perhaps one of the best known lumbermen in the Northwest, made his address on the subject of "The Boy Scout Movement as a Means to the Conservation of the Lumber Industry," drawing on the imagination of his hearers with particular effect.

Address was made in connection with the awarding of certificates to 17 local Scoutmasters who have just finished a two-year training course at the University of Oregon, under the leadership of Dean John F. Dean, dean of the school of education.

The certificates were presented by Lynn S. McCready, president of the Lane County council. Both in his talk and in the presentation of the tall and slender monarchs of the forest, from the sawyer who fells the tree to the last man who handles the finished product, after it has been sawed, the job must be done in a businesslike manner, he said. So it is with the boy scout movement, to the time in maturity, their ways must be prepared carefully, added Mr. Booth.

The Boy Scout program was presented by Mr. Booth as the best made by any organization in the world. The movement is doing something to do for the boys of the world.
