DAILY MARKET REPORT

(Oregon Journal Market Review) PORTLAND, Ore., Jan. 29.—Because of the lack of protective laws in this state against the sale of cold storage butter as fresh stock, the trade is sometimes congested. Some years ago Oregon had an official label for the fresh butter of the state, which enabled consumers and buyers generally to know when they were getting fresh butter or storage butter.

Improvement in butter making has shown wonderful strides in Oregon during the last year. Better quality butter, made at the dairy exchanges, although a co-operative organization of creamery interests was a very big factor. Leading creamery interests are today making further improvement in butter, because they realize that not only will such improvement aid the dairy industry, but they will be able to command a better market for the product.

No change in either price or cube prices was shown for the day.

Chicken Trade Holding Fair Demand for chickens was considered about steady along the wholesale way. Prices of heavy hens and spring chickens below actual needs, but light weight stock is plentiful. Turkeys dull.

Veal Market, Holding Better Better demand is showing for country-killed veal, although big retailers appear filled with low-priced stock that secured early in the week. Small butchers were therefore compelled to

Country-Killed Hogs Firm

With a continued scarcity of offerings, market here for country-killed hogs was firmly priced at full figures. There appears little disposition on the part of buyers to purchase in the part of this week, interest is shade value at this time.

Continued activity is shown for unions in the local territory. Purchases at Williamson Valley primary points continued at $1.50. While reports occasionally tell of a nickel better, confirmation is not available.
