Seaton Tells of Inhabitants of Islands

CONDITIONS ARE STUDIED

Development Seen American Regime Inaugurated

This is the first of a series of articles in which Mrs. Lillian Seaton will tell of the American occupation of the Philippine Islands. Mrs. Seaton has been interested in the islands since her first trip to the islands was only two years after the end of the civil government in the islands and has been a period of residence varying from months to two years.

By RUBY LINTNER
I'd like to say first of all, that I'm much interested in the present and in the political future of the Philippine Islands. I'm very fond of the Filipino people and much interested in their progress and welfare. They are very courteous. They have a certain amount of good management in all their schools. I'm an advantage over our people. They are hospitable, polite, mild, willing and eager to learn and very efficient under leaders. I want to make it plain that I like and sympathize with the people before I begin this series.

It is impossible to understand the present phases of the Philippine question without having at least some idea of the history of the American occupation of the islands. The speaker continued and thoughtfully said: "I don't think people don't realize that the Philippine Islands were almost upon America. You see, in the western hemisphere, the islands are under the jurisdiction of the Monroe doctrine," she said. "The Philippines are not. When the United States and Americans met to make the treaty of peace after the American war, America did much harder to disengage the islands just than it did to Dewey to take them, help had been by the Filipinos, who were in revolt against the Americans found that they were preoccupied. The first of turning the Philippines over to Spain, who had ruled these islands for 328 years oppressively, despotically. As the Philippines had cooperated with the United States, it would have been able to take this course, to way and put them back in the bad place they were before."

In Danger of Seizure
The second course, Mrs. Seaton said, might have been to give absolute and immediate independence. "However," she added, "the Monroe doctrine doesn't apply to the Philippines. They were a poor nation, with a small and unskilled army. At the time it is recognized as being the richest archipelago in the world in mineral, agricultural and other resources. If it were freed, it would have been but a time until Germany, England, some other European nation would have made some excuse to take them. For these islands are in a great strategic position in the Orient, a promising location for a military base."

Looking at the situation over the United States decided that they would turn the islands over to some nation to be exploited and sold. So, said Mrs. Seaton, they decided the third alternative, that of the islands and establishment of a government, with fine principles of democracy, to promote Filipino progress as rapidly as they were able of filling these responsibilities. "This was the policy the United States decided to undertake. The Philippines, having been an oppressive and despotic government for 328 years couldn't be a country coming into a new era of freedom and progress in the civil and cultural program of another country," said Mrs. Seaton. "At length they rose in rebellion, followed by the Philippine revolution, which cost half a billion dollars and many Filipino lives before it was put down."

"It is undoubtedly true," she said, "that the American people did a number of things we never believed that they had done. At the same time, we seem comparatively innocent in comparison to some of the things the Filipinos did to our soldiers to their own people who suspected of aiding or abetting the United States. With the American army and American navy to back it the uprising was put down."

The civil government was established in 1901 with Wm. Taft as governor-general, she continued. "A commission of American officers was sent to organize the Philippine a stable form of government, and to teach by precept and example the principles and traditions of a democratic government."

School Teachers Sent
Following on the heels of the army of occupation came the army of school teachers, said Mrs. Seaton. "Never in the history of the world, had one country loaded another with schools and education. One thousand teachers came in a mass. The first Thomas sailed with 700 from 600 to 700 at one time. They loaded entirely with teachers of whom were from Oregon. These teachers spread out all over the islands and started schools. It was a very unusual thing, that of a whole nation going to school. These were the first American schools in the islands, however. As soon as was taken by the American army, school was started in American college graduate as well."

Pet Turtle and Dog Try to Get Along
Both are Pets in Duffuy Home on Eleventh Avenue East; Not Best of Friends, Neither are They Enemies.
Happy growled at the turtle, and indeed one would hardly have called him a fairly large turtle, dragging his tortuous course across the carpet is a sight not often seen by a young bull terrier. (Or is Happy a Boston bulldog? This is a moot point.)
The turtle is a new pet belonging to Mrs. Jean DuBuy, 280 Eleventh avenue east, at whose home Happy is also a resident. The dog and the turtle are not yet the best of friends, but neither are they enemies. An armed truce, one might call it.
A tub in the conservatory is the home of the turtle. Here, in the tub, which contains a few inches of water and a little island of grassy water and a little island of grassy soil, the unusual pet lives, apparently quite content. He is fed bits of raw meat and occasional flies, and sleeps in the water. He comes up on the grassy island in the middle of the conservatory, and occasionally, however, to look over his little world. Here he reigns in undisputed authority, like Robinson Crusoe on his desert island.
When receiving orders from the turtle, he brought into the living room, where he clammers over the rug. If he is in an unsocial mood, he pulls his head, tail and four short legs into his shell, thus intimating that there is no one at home.
The turtle has had many adventures, but he is to have rest and peace as long as his present owner can keep him. "I was glad to get him," said Mrs. DuBuy. "When I was a child in Hungary we had a pet turtle that we thought a great deal of. He lived in an aquarium and was quite tame. We kept him for over 20 years. My mother, who was a good musician, would play the piano, the turtle would crawl under the instrument and seem to listen."
Speaking of insects
They tell a story about a tiny ant who gazed longingly but helplessly at the body of a dead horse.
Just then a hostess's trunk rattled by and a case of stuff fell over the tail gate and crashed to the ground.
A puddle formed and the ant took one slip.
Then he seized the dead horse by the tail and shouted: "Come on, big boy, we're going home!"
The bolting ribbon hat has come nearer being a substitute for that of felt than any hat has dared to be for some time past. It can be made to fit the head as well as felt and its means of development are seemingly impossible.

MOTOR TOURISTS BOOST CITY SAYS F. M. WILKINS

Municipal Auto Camp Here To Stay, Is His Edict

MANY SEEK LOCATIONS

Chairman of Park Board Heard Camp's Progresses Every- where During Tour

"Just so long as I have a voice in its affairs the municipal auto camp will not be abolished," says F. M. Wilkins, chairman of the city park board and who has recently returned home from an extended tour of the country. "As I view the situation," continued Mr. Wilkins, "it would be the greatest mistake we could make in keeping the tourists out of the city. Might as well build a Chinese wall around Eugene insofar as the ultimate effect of a ban is concerned if we forbid the motor tourist to camp within our borders. Many a man who has enjoyed the accommodations of the municipal grounds and viewed nature's grandeur from the promontory of Skinner's butte has bought a home here and settled in Eugene simply because of our evident attitude of hospitality and good will toward the stranger within our gates, by providing creature comforts to those who would tarry in the city and thus come into closer contact with its advantages as a location."

Cannot Afford to Lose Camp

"When one considers what other cities are doing in this respect Eugene cannot afford to close it up," said Mr. Wilkins. "Why should Washington, D. C., obviously immune from outside influences and a city that has the advantage to set aside a tract of land for the accommodation of the auto tourists? Yet, the capital has done this thing, and more, it has appropriated thousands of dollars to maintain its auto camp. Kansas City also supports a municipal auto camp and in each of the two instances the motorist pays a fee merely sufficient to cover the actual cost of providing for his entertainment. In order that some idea may be gained of the Kansas City attitude on the municipal auto park question I quote from an item outlining the plan of that city to spend $27,000,000 in civic improvement during the current year and of which the following proposals is an excerpt:
"For a municipal air field, bonds of half a million dollars would be issued and $50,000 would be added for a better tourist camp."
"Right here I want to say that the fame of Eugene's auto camp has been spread by virtually every tourist who has happened to pitch his tent on the grassy slope of the butte site," continued Mr. Wilkins. "I heard his praises sung as far away as in the national capital. It is one of the cleanest and most slightly camps to be found anywhere in the country. The ground is wonderfully well drained and the sanitary conditions are most satisfactory. Another feature appreciated by the tourist is that of the bathing facilities afforded by the river, a stretch of water extending for half a mile along the shore which gradually deepens as the bather draws away from the bank. I look upon this adjunct to the camp as really the best of all its allurements."

Thousands Visit Camp

"In an off-hand estimate I would say that between 30,000 and 40,000 autos have camped on the municipal grounds in the past four years. Having viewed the panorama of the upper valley from this vantage point these motor campers have gone out from here into every state in the union. Fully 80 percent of the visitors have been Eugene's best and most satisfactory advertisers. I found them everywhere on my trip—east, west, north and south. There is something to the lure of this great outdoor west, a pulling force exerted upon the people of the east who are hoping some time to cast their fortunes within the realm where nature ever smiles and the sun gleams warm an hill and vale. To those of small means the paved highways and the automobile will enable these intending settlers to realize their ambition by providing the only method of travel by which they can afford to come.
Give Them Best, Suggested
"The only way for Eugene and this community to derive the full benefit of tourist travel is to give these pilgrims the best we have here and to protect them in every way possible in the enjoyment of the privileges of the municipal auto camp," he stated. "In so doing we will continue to share in the benefits and good will which are the concomitants of a generous and hospitable attitude toward the tourists who, as a class, show such ready response to good treatment. Nearly all the cities in the country, realizing the advantages of catering to the motor tourists more than ever before are making preparations to welcome these travelers for, obviously, they are mostly home-makers seeking new locations."
"The observations on the situation are the result of close study and of observation gleaned during my trip and because of my contact with the hordes of tourists who have enjoyed the privileges and accommodations of Eugene's municipal auto camp.
"Those persons who are agitating the closing of the municipal auto park would have the public believe that it is a makeshift institution. Nothing could be further from the truth. The city spent about $10,000 in fitting up this camp, hence the talk of abandoning it is sheer folly. To clear the ground and eliminate refuse left by a gravel company cost in the neighborhood of $1000. Other items of cost included erection of the rest cottage equipped with shower baths, toilets and water extensions to all points, sanitary equipment for washing and camp stoves—all this expenditure for camping facilities together with 22 tent houses.
"To say that this camp is not modern and comparable with the best of municipal grounds anywhere in the country would not be stating a fact. And nowhere under the sun will the camper find so much lush grass as that which covers the butte slope in a carpet of unbroken emerald."
