

WILDCAT PETE KEEPS WORLD CHAMPIONSHIP

Jones Suffers Dislocated
Knee in Match

GRAPPLING SHOW FAST

Junior Middleweight Wrestling
Title Decided in 79 Minutes
At Armory

By ARDEN K. PANGBORN
George (Wildcat) Pete settled definitely his claim to the junior middleweight championship of the world when he dislocated Henry Jones' knee after 79 minutes of torrid wrestling to win the scheduled two hour American Legion grapple show at the armory. Pete won the world's title from Jones several days ago, but Jones at that time claimed a foul and demanded a rematch. There was no question as to the outcome of the affair last night and the three judges and the referee could vote only one way, for after the fall Jones was unable to come back to the mat.

Though Pete captured the championship, he did not hold the advantage all the way through the match. As a matter of fact he held it through but a very small portion of the match. Jones, who suffered an injured leg in a match at Newberg a few days ago, showed immediately that he wanted to get last night's encounter out of the way as soon as possible. From the opening song he assumed the aggressive and worked with a speed entirely lacking in the opening minutes of the last two Jones-Pete tilts.

Pete was on the defensive from the start. He must have broken half a hundred holds in the first hour, while he clamped on only two or three himself. He was playing for a break which he felt bound to come, but in the meantime the outcome looked pretty gloomy for Pete as far as the fans were concerned. The crowd was none too enthusiastic and none too thrilled over the prospect.

Jones Tries Everything
Jones tried a little bit of everything. Twice he had leg splits which seemed almost certain to result in falls. Time after time he used the whip wristlock and the arm bar, until finally Pete's arms were almost paralyzed from the constant strain. At the end of the first hour Jones worked into a Boston crab hold, which again seemed to spell the finish of Pete, but the wiry Eugene boy, after taking a world of punishment, kicked himself loose.

Only the ropes saved Pete from sailing out of the ring on his head, as Jones sailed out in the last match of the two championship claimants, when Jones used his whip wristlock shortly before the end of the affair.

Even the deciding fall seemed at first to be in favor of Jones. Pete had Jones in a corner. Jones, coming back to the center of the ring, lifted Pete into the air for an airplane spin. Three times they whirled; then Pete, writhing in the air, caused Jones to slip, his leg beneath him. Pete fell on Jones with a crash and the only thing necessary was the touching of Jones' shoulders to the mat, for his left knee was dislocated and he was unable to continue.

The $1000 belt emblematic of the title was presented to Pete in the ring immediately after the match. Jones weighed in at 148 and Pete at 152 1/2.

In a preliminary Merle Rife of Eugene and Harry Elliott, Portland, each took one fall to earn a draw. Rife won the first in 10 1/2 minutes and Elliott the second in 8 minutes. The men weighed 170 pounds.

BLACKWELL MAKES HIT

LOCAL BOY KAYOS LEWIS IN PORTLAND FIGHT

Joe Blackwell Eugene boxer, stole the show in Portland last night when he knocked out Red Lewis of Bellingham, Wash., in the first round of a scheduled six-round semi-windup, according to a long distance telephone call received from Herb Owen, local matchmaker.

This is the second fight in less than a week that Blackwell has won by the kayo route. He finished Frankie Burnell of Portland in the second round of the main event on the local boxing card last Friday night. Joe's fight in Portland last night was the sensation of the card, Owen said.

Harry Dillon won the main event in Portland from Wilson Yarbo.

or, wholly to the pollenizer trees and the pollenizer.

Pollenizers are important. "Reasonably dependable cherry production," says Mr. Stewart, "is almost wholly a question of adequate pollenization, and the cherry grower who fails to provide this essential has only himself to blame if his yields are unsatisfactory."

Twenty-five stards of bees were kept in this orchard during the blossom season.

From the Earl W. farm, the members of the tour proceeded to a study that was conducted with the keenest enthusiasm and a quite astonishing measure of skill by all hands. The scene of this particular study in farm methods was the pleasant dining room of the Willakemle Grange hall, and the laboratory material for the experiments was provided by the Willakemle 4-H cooking club, under the direction of Arnold Collier, county club leader, and Miss Agnes Brightman home demonstration agent. The experiments here conducted, it should be added, were designed to disprove the dictum that the human stomach holds only a quart.

Clover Methods Explained
The first farm visited after luncheon was the Loren Edwards farm, on the Pacific highway this side of Junction City, where the clover growing methods practiced by Mr. Edwards and his sons were observed. Clover, Mr. Edwards says, is their most profitable crop. It is sown usually with oats in the spring, but they have had fine results from seeding directly in the stubble in the fall, drilling in the seed without even harrowing. They run clover two seasons, and then rotate with grain. This spring their clover was heavily pastured with sheep in preparation for a seed crop.

Mr. Edwards and his sons are planning an interesting experiment for this summer. They are going to harvest and hull their seed clover with a combine, thus avoiding much of the delay and loss from early rains that are the bane of the clover seed growers. It has been done successfully, they say, and they are now purchasing a combine for the purpose.

Ladino Clover Visited
From the Edwards farm the tour sped on the Ferguson to view Ladino clover, grown under irrigation on the farm of Mrs. Looch Nult. Ladino is a creeping clover, and where moisture is adequate it provides a fine and abundant quality of winter pasture. Many dairymen in Lane county are experimenting with it under irrigation as a substitute for summer stage.

Harding grass, now in its first season on the Washburne farms west of Junction City, was next observed. This is a grass that seems peculiarly adapted to low, white soils where the water stands late in the spring. Mr. Washburne has 40 acres of it in its first year, and so far this spring he has been pasturing 300 sheep on it and they have not been able to keep it down. He expects to sow much more of this grass.

Dunn Cherry Orchard Seen
The H. W. Dunn cherry orchard on the Pacific highway south of Junction City concluded the tour, and here the visitors were shown an interesting example of the occasionally fine uses of adversity. This orchard, like most of the earlier ones, was set out without pollinizers, but a large number of the trees, with a fair degree of regularity over the tract, were killed back by gummosis, and seedling trees came up from the root below the original graft. These seedlings provided pollinizers, and this orchard, in spite of one of the most unfavorable blossom seasons in history, is heavily loaded with cherries. Here again Mr. Stewart took occasion to point out the supreme importance of adequate pollinizer trees in sweet cherry orchards.

Mr. Dunn is preparing to dust his cherry trees with copper dust, this process being both cheaper and more efficient than spraying. The dusting will be done very early in the morning, when there is moisture enough to cause the dust to cling.

CONGRESS MAKES RECORD

Nearly Thousand New Laws Repose Upon Statute Books

WASHINGTON, May 29.—(AP)—Nearly one thousand new laws reposed tonight upon the statute books of the nation, telling their own story of the whirlwind legislative accomplishments of the first session of the 70th congress.

Covering a range of activities bounded only by the wide scope of American interests, the newly written acts constitute a legislative record unparalleled in a decade.

Starting off at a slow speed, the legislative machinery gradually was worked into high gear, and as adjournment time approached, the legislative speedometer touched new marks for recent years, and the house and senate crossed the finish line almost on schedule.

Filibuster Held Up Action
Had it not been for the grip of a filibuster holding the Boulder canyon bill stationary in the senate, the congress probably would have approved or rejected nearly every bill on the calendar of the two houses. It almost reached that legislative millennium as it was.

Exclusive of today, 19,770 measures were introduced in the two houses. Of this number, 1333 were reported by house committees and slightly more than 900 by senate committees; many still await action by one house or the other; some are in conference and 323 were enacted into law.

Among the major pieces of legislation placed upon the statute books by agreement between congress and the chief executive, were:

The Mississippi river flood control bill.

The $222,495,000 tax reduction measure, signed by Mr. Coolidge early today.

The White-Jones merchant marine bill.

The alien property settlement act.
