OVERDUE TROUSERS SOUGHT AT NEWSPAPER OFFICE

Wrong Number Brings Unusual Request of Register Staff Member, Who Gasp

Girls who answer the telephone in newspaper offices are used to having unusual questions put to them, but one cannot blame Miss Ardis McFarland, Morning Register staff member, for being startled when a question was asked over the phone yesterday.

"When will those trousers be ready that I sent down there to be shortened?" asked a voice over the telephone. Miss McFarland gasped. "Did you send them to the Register office?" she asked and it was the other person's turn to gasp.

Somewhere in Eugene is a grocery store with a number something like the Register's. Yesterday afternoon the telephone rang and a man said: "Ask George what he did with those groceries." There was only one George in the office at the time and his mind was full of other matters. He denied all knowledge of any groceries.
