IN THE DAY'S NEWS

Dispatches from Paris assure us that the flapper, with her short skirts and her short hair, is to be dropped into the discard. It is the Paris dressmakers who will do the dropping.

The new girl who will take the flapper's place, if the modistes of Paris have their way, will be a different sort of creature. She will wear, we read, "clothes of exquisite daintiness, built along strictly feminine lines. Those lines will be less spotting than heretofore, more slender, less suggestive of the golf course and more suggestive of the mystery of her sex."

We offer no predictions as to whether the Paris costumers will get away with it this time. They have tried before to put skirts beneath the distinctively American fashions which have ruled the feminine world of late, to the detriment of Paris, and have failed. But this time they may succeed. You never can tell where the ladies are concerned.

But this prediction we will risk, with the greatest assurance: If these new clothes which the Paris dressmakers are seeking to foist upon womankind make the grade and become the fashion, they will be all wrong and the morals of the race will be threatened in consequence.

It has been ever thus, since the beginning, and in all probability it will be always thus.

When Eve first made her appearance, according to the Biblical tradition, she was clothed most appropriately for a hot climate, such as the Garden of Eden is supposed to have been.

But Adam was dissatisfied and started in to criticize, and so in time Eve blossomed out in a fig leaf. Did that satisfy the male of the species?

Evidently not, because the daughters of Eve have been changing their costume ever since, and each new change has been greeted by a blast of criticism from the men folk.

Getting down to a time within the memory of those now living, we find the women wearing corsets and bustles, sweeping skirts and high heels. Were the men happy over this far cry from the original fig leaf?

Emphatically not. They complained that the corset distorted the feminine form divine and promoted all sorts of physical ills. The sweeping skirts, the men proclaimed bitterly, mopped up the germs from the streets and simply played hob with health.

So the ladies, ever anxious to please, discarded the corset and took the shears to the skirt.

Were the men folk mollified?
Did they babble happy words of praise because of the changes that had been made? They did not.
They started in to crab, and the crabbing they had done about the corsets and the long skirts was merely a gentle murmur when compared to the crabbing they have been doing about the flapper and what she wears—or doesn't wear.

From all of this we deduce for the benefit of the ladies an axiom.
It is this: Whatever the women wear is wrong—all wrong; terribly wrong; and ought to be otherwise.
But, lest the ladies be too much cast down, we shall deduce for them another axiom out of the experience of the ages. While what the women are wearing may be all wrong the women who are inside what is worn are all right. There is plenty of masculine testimony on that point—they will pay no attention to the masculine outcry against their clothes and will go ahead and wear what they please.

Thus they will be doing a great kindness, for if there is one thing more than another that the men of all ages have liked it is to be shocked by what the women wear.

Chicago has a new police commissioner, and he is making a lot of blustering talk about what he is going to do in the way of ridding his city of gangs, shootings and bombings.

It is all bluster, designed to cover up an absence of results. If Chicago's new commissioner of police, or any of his predecessors, really wanted to clean up the city he could do it. There isn't the slightest doubt as to that.

Chicago is a crime-ridden city because the police of Chicago permit it to be so. They are enabled to permit it to be a crime-ridden city because the people make no effective objection. That is the whole story.

An idea of the sincerity of the new Chicago police commissioner may be gleaned from his statement that there are just two causes for crime in his city—the 18th amendment and the Volstead act. Remove them, he says, and a great percentage of the crime will cease.

Anyone who talks like that is either a fraud or a fool, and it is highly probable that he isn't a fool.

Talk on Good Manners

By MRS. CORNELIUS SPECKMAN

Church Only
Dear Mrs. Beekman:
A got an invitation the invitation invites not only to the church ceremony, but also includes an invitation to the house reception. But B says that the invitation is only to the church. Will you please tell me which is right?

The invitation reads like this:
Mr. and Mrs. John Jones request the honor of your presence at the marriage of their daughter
Mable
to
Mr. John Brown
Wednesday, the first of at nine o'clock
..... Church
..... New York

B is correct. This invitation invites to the church ceremony only.
The expression "request the honor

Tillie The Toiler

of your presence" means the church ceremony only. The expression for the invitation to the reception or for a house wedding is "request the pleasure of your company." Also, the invitation with this church invitation, if A were to be invited to the reception.
Perhaps there is to be no reception.

Saying Goodbye

Dear Mrs. Beekman:

1. Will you kindly inform me which is proper to shake or not to shake hands with one's gloves on?
2. What is the proper thing to say to the person who says to you, after meeting you for the first time, "I am glad to have met you?"
Is it considered a breach of etiqquette if one does not say this upon leaving the person to whom you have been introduced?

3. When a man steps aside to let a lady pass, is it proper for her to say "Thank you"?—L. S.
4. It is not proper for a man to shake hands with his glove on, but it is permitted for a woman to do this.

5. When the person to whom we have been introduced says such an agreeable thing to us, we should thank him for it, of course, and add something that does not "leave the sentence in the air," something that will indicate that the pleasure is mutual. The best thing usually is: "Thank you, I am so happy to have met you, too," or "Thank you, Mrs. Yeomans, it has been a great pleasure to meet you, too." I am very glad to have met you, too.
And the words can be said with friendliness and graciousness.

No, it is not necessary to make this statement if you do not wish to do so—and it is far better not to say it, for you do not wish to do so. Indeed, it is out of place after, for instance, the casual introduction, the introduction that is just made in passing, an introduction that is more or less perfunctory.

6. If he takes some trouble to make way for her, she would thank him, or if she passes in front of him in a way that needs an "excuse me," she would say this.

Eating Your Cake

Dear Mrs. Beekman:

1. Should cake be eaten with a fork, and should one be criticized for eating it with his or her fingers?
That is, if it is not a cake such as whipped cream cake, but just a plain solid piece of cake?
I have always eaten it with a fork, but find myself of late inclined to pick it up in my fingers.

2. If a girl is walking with her fiance and meets some one she knows, or if they are at a party or calling on her friends, how does she introduce him?

3. As I have just received my engagement ring, I would appreciate knowing how to announce my engagement.—M. F.

1. It is far better to use the fork to eat cake, even when it is not frosted. I recommend that you adhere to your way of eating cake —and don't pick it up in your fingers, unless there is no fork served with it.

2. Miss Allen, may I present Mr. Brown? or, if she wishes to tell the information that he is her fiance, "Miss Allen, may I present my fiance, Mr. Brown?" or, "Miss Allen, this is my fiance, Mr.
Brown."

3. Tell the relatives and close friends who live near and write notes of the happy news to those who do not live near enough to tell by word of mouth. Then—parties, if you wish.

(Mrs. Beekman will be glad to answer questions on etiquette submitted by readers.)
