Famine.

I am the skeleton in every nation's closet. I hide myself in the dark recesses behind the silent uniforms swaying in the dark. While the guests make merry and the householders ply them with viands at the friendly board I bide my time.

But when the alarms sound and the guests go out to kill, then I start forth in the gray shadows of early morning. With my thin wand I touch the cornfields and watch them wither.

And as the sun shines on battlefields my day of triumph comes. No longer afraid to show my hollow face, I stalk through village and city, laying my rattling hands on mother and wife and babe.

My comrade, War, true to his eternal promise, has given me the entry to all societies.—Life.

"French humor is a little too broad for us, and when it isn't too broad it is apt to be disgusting."

The speaker was Miss Gladys Unger, who has adapted so many French plays. She continued: "A Frenchman told me a joke the other day. He said two rustic sweethearts were walking out together. The girl remarked:

"I like you very well, Gaston, all except those letters G. S. tattooed on your hand."

"But," said Gaston hotly, "don't you know, my dear, that it's the latest style to have your initials on your handkerchief?" — Chicago Record-Herald.

By Way of Inducement.

A certain youngster in Washington was one day suffering greatly by reason of an aching tooth. His mother was endeavoring to calm him against the necessary visit to the dentist.

"You'll have it out, won't you, dearie?" the mother pleaded. "It won't hurt much, and then the ache will all be over."

But then the unhappy child began to howl with pain. His brother, a year older, was likewise distressed, and added his pleadings to those of the mother.

"Do have it out, dear," repeated the mother.

"Yes, Dick, have it out," added the brother. "It will be one less to clean, you know."—Lippincott's Magazine.

BLACK BOX HOODOO

Camera May Not Have Unlocked the Trouble, But It Got All the Blame.

By H. M. LOME.

Mr. Ben Blanchard was a small, chubby man, baby-stare eyes and an infantile smile. He called himself a community promoter. This, as must be admitted, was a more taking title than that of land boomer, especially when much of the land so boomed was productive of little else than sand-burs, sage-brush, cacti, jack-rabbits, and a fair sprinkling of rattlesnakes. That is by the way, however. If you make inquiries among his eastern friends—especially in Montague street, Brooklyn—you will gather some picturesque estimates of M. Blanchard's business abilities. Financial persons of Brooklyn pride themselves on being possessed of a certain Yankee shrewdness which steers them clear of the wiles of the average schemer.

Apart from that, no man is considered reliable until he has been properly introduced by an old Brooklynite. This once done, he is established in their confidence.

Now, Ben Blanchard managed to make his entry into Montague street under the auspices of a certain Brooklynite of ancient and honorable lineage. Through the introduction thus afforded him, the community promoter made a number of acquaintances of a highly beneficial sort.

Among the communities which Blanchard had brought into being were a couple in western Kansas. At various points farther west he was in touch with other promoters to whom he introduced "good things" from the East, receiving in return a percentage of the ensuing plunder.

Once a year he was accustomed to issue invitations for a western trip to the rich and "easy" people whom he met in the East. The junket was done in fine style. A special car with attendants was provided, the food was excellent, at Topeka and the stopping places beyond, the local boards of trade did honor to the distinguished visitors, and so did the local newspapers to the extent of many columns.

During the very last trip engineered by Blanchard I acted as "historian"—to use the Blanchardian term. In reality, I was his press agent. Thus it was that he happened to have a certain experience with railroad superstitions.

The party, after visiting Denver and Manitou, was on its way east. At Pueblo, one afternoon, there was a change of engines, and, as it subsequently turned out, the engineer had orders to "let her lick" across the prairie so as to show the eastern gentry that there was nothing slow about that particular section.

An old-time 'dobe house, not far from the depot had excited the interest of some of the party, and while awaiting their return the writer walked up the platform, carrying a kodak of goodly proportions. Jim Dell, the engineer—tall, lank, and sunburnt to the hue of an Indian—was just getting into the cab. His fireman followed, wiping his fingers on a clout of greasy waste. The camera was made ready for action.

Dell wheeled sharply at the bellows-click of the camera. Then he frowned at the instrument and its owner.

"You're sure thinkin' of gettin' a picture of this here machine?"

"I said that was my plan."

"And of me and my pardner?"

"I nodded."

"Well, I'm saying this, I am. The machine can't get away from you, I s'pose. But I'll be darned if you get my face or Bill's inside the contraption. Why? For reasons—good reasons! I've never had my picture took by one of them black boxes that was owned by a passenger but what trouble of several sorts followed. Ain't that the truth, Bill?"

Bill grunted assent.

Then the pair clambered hastily into the cab, and even as they did so the bulb was pressed, and a good negative of two greasy rear-facades was secured.

Dell followed instructions in the matter of speed, as a roaring, swirling wake of dust and dried cactus attested. But the going was too good to last.

Whether the hoodoo in the "black box" bestirred itself, or whether Bill got too busy with the fire shovel, the narrator knoweth not. The fact remains, however, that less than fifty miles from the starting point the engine and the car came to a jagged halt.

As the camera registered a record of the wreck, Jim and his helper cursed eastern dudes whose hoodoos worked mischief with western locomotives.

It was three hours before Pueblo furnished another engine that, even to the lay eye, looked grouchy and superannuated.

"It's that confounded old highbinder, No. 5," Jim was heard to mutter as the fresh engine wheeled into sight over a roll of the prairie. "Hear the durned bron-cal lungs of her."

Anyhow, No. 5 was coupled up, and Jim and his helper proceeded to throw it into her for all that they were worth, and a trifle more 'an she was. Thirty miles had not been covered, when the car seemed to vibrate itself into an aeroplane for a sickening second or so, came back down on the rails with a spine-jarring thud, and then stopped with a suddenness that threw people and things in unstudied heaps throughout its length. Luckily the camera was unhurt.

Naturally everybody made for the doors. A few left by the windows. The cause of the unscheduled stop was plain. No. 5 had snapped her driving-rod near the middle, and it had smashed the cab to fragments. Bill and Jim had apparently vanished into thin air. The wreck was striking, and even picturesque, so the camera was made ready.

Then we were all made conscious of a gaunt, black and blood-covered apparition arising from a nearby clump of sagebrush, swearing horribly, and picking burs from out his cheeks and hands. It was Jim disguised in his gore and the grime of the accident. He lifted up his voice and yelled.

"What did I tell you about that black box? I tell ye all," went on Jim, addressing the tourists collectively in a roar, "if that there box has a berth on the car ag'in I don't drive no engine in front of it!"

"You hear him," snortingly supplemented Bill, who now appeared from the other side of the engine. He had evidently fallen face downward into a clump of cacti, and the splines in his nose and lips made him speak snuffingly.

"And," added Bill, shooting a malevolent glance at the camera owner, "if I had my way, there'd be a certain fool party left behind on the prairie in company with his fool machine."

It took much persuasion, argument, cajolery and entreaty before Jim gave consent for the camera to travel behind him, and when he left us at South Hutchinson, Kan., he wore an evident look of relief.

But that was not the whole or the end of the hoodoo. On the way to Kansas City one of the party let a valuable gold watch slide out of an open window. At St. Louis it was discovered that a flange of the car wheel had suddenly worn as thin as cardboard, and that a bad accident had been narrowly averted.

Before this, when on the homestretch between Buffalo and New York, Blanchard arose and, addressing the party, expressed his gratification at meeting so many men of congenial disposition and sterling worth; and, in order to commemorate the occasion, he was going to do his good, his ever dear friends a small service, etc., etc. He was going to let them in on a little deal which he had intended to keep all to himself, but which, on second thought, he had determined to share with those whose friendship he had learned to, etc., etc. Every man bit.

Six months later I met a member of the party on Broadway.

"Say," said he, "have you still got that camera of yours?"

"Yes, why?"

"Oh, nothing. But I begin to believe in Jim and his superstitions. Maybe if the camera hadn't brought bad luck on board, myself and the other idlers wouldn't have lost large sums to Blanchard."

Vivisection.

The growth of vivisection is indicated in a White paper just issued. The total number of experiments on living animals in 1913 in England was 88,158 or 4,569 more than in 1912. Of these 81,809 consisted of inoculating by hypodermic injections, and some few other proceedings performed without anesthetics. Only 2,939 were of such a nature that they came under the licensing provision of the act, which stipulates that the animal must be kept under an anesthetic during the whole of the experiment, and that if the pain is likely to continue after its effect has ceased, or if any serious injury has been inflicted on the animal, be killed before it recovers from the influence of the anesthetic. As many as 26,269 experiments were performed by 32 licensees, working at ten institutions, in the course of cancer investigations, most of them being inoculations into mice. The total number of licensees was 638. Several irregularities by individuals are recorded but in no case has the license been rescinded.

Defeat That Was Victory.

One hundred years ago the celebrated American privateer "General Armstrong," in command of Capt. Samuel C. Reid, ran the blockade of British warships off Sandy Hook and put to sea on what was destined to be her last voyage. The ship arrived at the island of Fayal, in the Azores, and soon afterward three British warships entered the bay. After a fruitless effort to escape, Captain Reid cleared his decks for action. The British made three attacks on the "General Armstrong" in small boats, and each time were beaten off with heavy loss. Finally the British vessels closed in and began a heavy fire. Finding further resistance against such overwhelming odds futile, Captain Reid set a fuse to his magazine and with his crew safely got ashore. This battle was the last naval engagement of the war of 1812. In the action the British lost 359 in killed and wounded, while the American loss was but two killed and seven wounded.

WIT and HUMOR

NOT QUALIFIED AS MUSICIAN

Sambo Declined Place on Band Because He Couldn't Even Carry a Tune on a Mouth Organ.

The conversation in the lobby of a Washington hotel the other night turned to charitable work, when Congressman William P. Borland of Missouri was reminded of an incident along that line.

Some time ago Sambo Smith was watching the development of a watermelon vine in his garden on the outskirts of a southern city, when the esteemed Washington Snow rambled down the road and became a part of the immediate scenery.

"Mistah Smith," began the esteemed Snow, trailing his way across the garden, "I hab come to see yo' on some 'pountant bizness."

"Yes, sah," agreeably answered Sambo. "What kin I do fo' yo', Mistah Snow?"

"We am gittin' up a mission band, Mistah Smith," impressively replied the other, "an' we would like yo' ter jine."

"Say, Mistah Snow," broadly smiled Sambo, "yo' make me laugh like great happiness! Yo' know berry well dat I kain't eben carry a tune on a mauf organ."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Not Worth Mentioning.

Snooker (fiercely)—Your fowls have been over the wall and scratched my garden.

How It Happened.

"How did the accident happen?" asked the sympathetic friend.

"Well, I'll tell you," replied the man on crutches. "The automobile was going pretty fast and all of a sudden we struck a wet place on the asphalt and there was a noise and the doctor said: 'He'll be able to be around in about four weeks.'"

No Consistency.

"I don't understand George," said the bride.

"How so?"

"He told me to sweeten his coffee with a smile, which I did. And then he went and put in two lumps of sugar, anyhow."

WORK OF SKILL AND DARING

Japanese Whalers Constantly Risk Lives in the Pursuit of Most Dangerous Quarry.

Many of the Japanese whalers are most expert and daring men. After a whale has been cornered, harpooned and is slowly giving out from exhaustion the nimble expert of the whaling crew must prove his mettle.

The skilled Jap, after jumping upon the animal's back and cutting two gashes in the head, one on each side, through which a rope must be run, and tied, cannot always perform his work in one trial. Often the animal makes a deep dive. But the little Jap must hold fast to his quarry and dive also, trusting to the fact that his own air supply in his lungs will last as long as that of the whale's.

The Jap is safer from being drowned than from being crushed by the infuriated animal's tail. If the little Jap lets go it usually means his death—so he hangs on to the diving quarry. Frequently these whalers lose their lives from drowning, but the members of their crew look upon this misfortune with something of a fatalistic regard.

But the main business in hand is the capture of the whale. As the fight progresses and the maddened, frightened mammal grows weaker and, finally, is dying, the boat crews row closer to the body and pray for the ease of his departing spirit. Members of the crew will call out the words, "Joraku! Joraku! Joraku!" and on the third day after the mammal has been hauled ashore a service is held and prayers offered for the animal's future contentment of spirit.

As soon as the animal has been towed to the shore line he is cut up, the Japs are making huge excavations and penetrating inside the animal's body as though entering a mine shaft or gallery, and eventually making their exit, all covered with blood. It is a gruesome sight, but is looked upon purely as a matter of course among the Jap whalers.

Distractions of War.

Among the distractions of war it's plain that there's got to be a bit of brushing up in the knowledge of geography and history on the part of the parent if he would maintain his high seat of omniscience in the sight of his inquiring offspring.

"Papa, what are the Balkans?" inquired a little chap who had been poring over his papers.

"High hills, my son, high hills."

"They're mountains, aren't they?"

"Why—ah—yes. I believe they are," answered papa, who has a somewhat vague notion of that distant rampart.

"The paper says Austria is going to take them," pursued the persistent Willie. "What are they going to do with them?"

Here papa has to cast about in his mind for a moment.

"Oh, well," he equivocates, "I guess that's just figurative language. I don't suppose they'll really try to move them, you know."

"But, papa, the paper says—"

"Tut! tut! Never mind what it says—and say, don't you think it's about time you were going to bed?"

Battle of Lake Champlain.

One hundred years ago the Americans defeated the British in the battle of Lake Champlain, the last big naval engagement of the war of 1812. In the scale of military importance to the outcome of the war, this defeat and capture of the British squadron by Commodore Macdonough more than offset the British raid on Washington. With Macdonough's success command of the lake passed to the Americans, and the invasion of New York state by Sir George Prevost's army was necessarily abandoned. That was the most formidable army the British brought into the field in the whole course of the war. General Macomb with a mixed force of regulars and Vermont militia had held the British in check on land while Commodore Macdonough was defeating their fleet on the lake. Prevost dared not continue the campaign after his flank was exposed to the American fleet, and quietly returned to Canada. The result of the battle of Lake Champlain was to expedite the program of the peace negotiations at Ghent.

Knew Too Much.

"They say that it pays to be an all-around linguist," said a man who had just put his feet on American soil after a lively and trifle too interesting European experience; "but I'm not so sure about that. When I was a youth I acquired a pretty fair smattering of four languages, and when they had me on the anxious seat in Germany, instead of sticking to good old English, I foolishly began blating a mixture of German, French and Italian, and it took a half dozen influential Americans to keep them from doing things to me as a spy."

The Male of the Species.

Patience—I see some farmers in Germany use roosters for hatching eggs and raising the chicks. They take better care of the chicks than hens do, even fighting hawks to protect them, and running with them much longer.

Patience—Perhaps the hens have the vote over there.

Automobile Trick.

Bill—What's Gill doing now? Jill—Studying forestry, I guess.

"What makes you think so?"

"Well, I saw him in his automobile, today, and he was trying to climb a tree!"

The Successful Brood Mare.

Sloping shoulders and sloping pasterns, associated with straight, well-set, strongly muscled legs and dense, tough feet are extremely essential to longevity or hard service. The back should be comparatively straight, strong, short, closely coupled, well muscled and support a deep chest of medium width, good deep ribs and to the tail, which should set fairly high. The hind legs of the horse should be set well under the body. Strong hocks, well-set and sloping pasterns are of great value. True, level action with good style is essential in all good horses.—Breeder and Sportsman.

Rheumatic Throat Is Common Trouble

Should Be Treated in Blood To Prevent Recurrence.

There are successful gargles that stop soreness in the throat, but to prevent their incessant return, the blood must be put in order. The best remedy is S. S. S., as it influences all the functions of the body to neutralize the irritants or waste products and to stimulate their excretion through the proper channels.

Rheumatic sore throat is a dangerous affliction, as it means that the blood is loaded with more uric acid than the kidneys can excrete, and may thus lead to serious general disturbance.

The action of S. S. S. stimulates cellular activity. It prevents the accumulation of irritants in local spots. It enables the arteries to supply quickly the new red blood to replace worn-out tissue.

For this reason uric acid that finds the throat an easy prey to its breaking-down influence, is scattered and eliminated. In other words, S. S. S. prevents chronic conditions by enabling
