War A Crime.

A good article appeared in one of the leading papers a few days ago in relation to Germany's wonderful advancement.

This is true of Germany along nearly every line of human endeavor. She has out ranked nearly every other nation in the world, regardless of the field she has entered. For thoroughness in every branch, for perfection in scientific research she has excelled, and left other nations to copy. Thus her success in the present awful conflict, and though she loses, we can't see where the glory will come in for the conquerors.

We are not speaking of the justness or the war nor where the blame lies, for it is a question beyond us, and, we feel just as capable as many others who are arguing the pros and cons and stirring up a feeling of bitterness which always gets a result that is detrimental.

Our views along this line will not count for much in the great whirlpool of life, but every one should strive at all times to create a higher morality among their fellow creatures and finally insist on a civilization that will not tolerate a wholesale murder under the head of "war."

Regardless of your contention there is no excuse great enough to justify the present war, for war is supposed to emanate from the most highly cultivated minds of the powers at variance with each other. Then, why punish a poor individual without the training or culture of those who are making our laws governing these crimes, when they themselves break them at will, through greed for more power, more territory, or greater commercial expansion. It is all a crime without an excuse and without a redeeming feature or word in its favor.

the fight by organized labor for a $3 per eight hour day on county road work over the country. The writer contends that labor receives 80 per cent of the cost of roads and seems to feel that where labor is so plentiful they should be glad to work for less.

The laborer may get 80 per cent regardless of how small the wage and when he has completed the job the only way he can use the road is in wearing out shoe leather looking for another.

The wage paid is generally too small to admit of a saving deposit and when the work is over he is more dissatisfied and eventually loses all interest in his own or the welfare of others.

We received a communication this week which was intended as a contradiction to our article last week on the price of bread, but inasmuch as the writer failed to sign their name we treat it as an anonymous letter with very little weight. When you want to start something don't be afraid to back it up.
