Improvement.

The opening of the Celilo canal not only impresses one with the wonderful developments along the Columbia East, but a trip down the river brings to mind very forcibly the wonderful developments in the past two years and the great projects now underway.

Leaving Portland one is impressed with the Columbia highway with its beautiful scenery overlooking the mighty Columbia as it slowly winds its way carrying on its waters the largest ocean steamers, laden with the products of forest, river and farm of the great northwest.

The sea wall and municipal docks at Astoria, the hill docks at Flavel and the north and south jetties at the mouth of the Columbia river, all of which are now completed or under construction at a cost of $11,300,000.

While thinking of the wonderful developments along the Columbia, one must not lose sight of the playgrounds of the northwest. Three and one-half hours' ride from Portland brings us to Senseside and Gearhart with their miles of paved streets and fine buildings and sewer system, and surrounded by the rivers Wahonna and Necanicum, where fishing may be indulged in and the timber to the south affords good hunting. While we have these brilliant views near the ocean, the possibilities and advantages are not less brilliant in Central Oregon.

Nine months ago when this present European war commenced, the very inhabitants of the combating nations themselves were shocked to know that in our present supposedly high state of civilization, the assassination of a ruler would in any way involve more than the guilty parties or at most, be brought into the arbitration court, but it seems that civilization has vanished altogether when a combatant will deliberately prey upon and sink a passenger vessel carrying hundreds of non-uniformed citizens and people of non-combatant powers. Such was the fate of the Lusitania, sounding the death toll nearly equal to that of the Titanic of two years ago.

Remember when you have the cash, that your home merchant has trusted you when you needed credit. Why not continue to patronize him?
