Have you ever lost a crop of hay through musting—or your barn and hay through spontaneous combustion?

There is one sure way to prevent this—

USE SALT when you stack your hay IT PAYS

The Salt more than pays for itself in the weight of the hay. There is a further gain in weight through moisture held—and the stock will eat up salted hay clean where unsalted hay will be mused over and wasted.

20 pounds of salt should be used to each ton of hay. Stack three feet of hay, sprinkle the salt over this by hand. Then another layer of hay, more salt and so on.

Experiments carried on at the Wisconsin Experiment station indicate that salt should be supplied to dairy cows unless the ration furnishes a sufficiency thereof. It is calculated that the minimum quantity in the food to keep a cow of 1000 lb. live weight in flourishing health is that which is equivalent to 3-4 oz. salt per day, and that a cow in milk needs as much more as will restore the proportion removed in the milk, namely a little over 1-2 oz. of salt for every 20 lb. of milk.
