Grain Bins.

Here is another idea for a portable grain bin. This bin is made somewhat like a barrel except the staves are straight and parallel instead of being curved, and the hoops are made of heavy wire. The staves are made of 1x6 fencing, only first class stuff being used. To make such a bin cut enough staves of proper length to make the capacity desired and lay them down on a floor all parallel. Lay the heavy wire across these and staple the wire to each stave where it crosses. This makes a sort of draper or wide belt of the staves, which, when stood up and bent until the ends of the wires meet, forms a sort of cylindrical tank which is self bracing. Suitable fastenings at the ends of the wires make the cylinder complete. When the bin is not in use it can be rolled up with the wire or hoopside innermost and laid away in the dry. It will be seen that when cylinder is in use with the hoops on the outside, the edges of all the staves will be pressed tightly together, but when it is rolled in the other direction with the wire innermost the staves will separate, thus allowing a shorter bend and making a comparatively small roll. The details of floor and roof can be worked out as in other portable bins.

Mrs. Lucore, who is slowly improving.
