PROVED SPIRIT OF COLONISTS

In Its Consequences That Conflict Ranks as the Most Momentous of All the Struggles of Revolutionary Days-Revealed to the British the True Spirit of Their Foes.

A LITTLE before sunset 143 years a few hundred American stacked their guns, threw their packs, seized their trenching tools, and set to work with great spirit At midnight Boston was buried in sleep. The sentry's cry of "All's well!" could be heard distinctly from its shores.

At dawn, 143 years ago, the Americans at work were seen by the sailors on board the British ships of war and the alarm was given. The captain of the Lively, the nearest ship, without waiting for orders, put a spring upon her cable and, bringing her guns to bear, opened a fire upon the hill. One man, among a number who had incau-tiously ventured outside, was killed. A subaltern reported his death to Colonel

Prescott and asked what was to be done, "Bury him," was the reply. It was the first fatality in the battle of Bunker Hill, one of the most momentous conflicts in our Revolutionary history. It was the first regular battle between the British and the Americans and most eventful in its consequences The British had ridiculed and despised their enemy, representing them as dastardly and inefficient; yet here the best British troops, led on by experienced officers, were repeatedly repulsed by an inferior force of that enemy-mere single night, and suffered a loss rarely paralleled in battle with the most veteran soldlers. According to their own returns their killed and wounded, out of a detachment of 2,000 men, amounted to 1,054, and a large proportion of them officers. The loss of the Americans was 411 out of 1,500 men engaged. So the number of casualties in this battle was more than 80 per cent

General Joseph Warren.

What the Victory Meant.

A gallant loyalist of Massachusetts, who fought so well for King George that he rose to be a full general in the British army, regarded Bunker Hill as a transaction which controlled everything that followed, "You could not." he would say to his friends on the other side, "have succeeded without it."

"The rebels," Gage wrote a week after the battle, "are shown not to be the disorderly rabble too many have supposed. In all their wars against the French they have showed no such conduct and perseverance as they do now, They do not see that they have exchanged liberty for tyranny. No people were ever governed more absolutely than the American provinces now are; and no reason can be given for their submission but that it is a tyranny which they have erected them-

Bunker Hill exhibited the Americans to all the world as a people to be courted by allies and counted with by foes. It was a marvel that so many armed citizens had been got together so quickly and still a greater marvel that they had stayed together so long.

Move Forced on British.

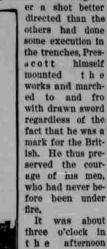

After the engagement at Lexington on April 19 the British force under General Gage was increased to 10,000 men by the arrival of Generals Howe, Clinton, and Burgoyne with their com-mands from England. These occupied the town of Boston on a peninsula exending into the harbor. The naval forces consisted of the Falcon, Lively, Somerset, Symmetry, Glasgow, and four floating batteries. Across the Charles river, at Cambridge, and on the surrounding hills, were encamped between 16,000 and 20,000 undisciolined Americans. The British, thus cut off from communication with the main- ment and our greatest usefulness land, were seriously hampered for pro-visions, and General Gage contem-plated a movement to occupy the several heights near Charlestown, at Dor chester, and adjacent pomra, The arrival of such a formidable force of the enemy caused the gravest concern to the colonists. It was ru-mored that the British would sally forth from Boston and burn the neighboring towns. It was to prevent this that the Americans determined to fortify Bun-ker Hill; for, if the British should get out of the city and intrench upon Dor chester Heights to the south of Boston, the Continental position would be made untenable.

Prescott's Gallant Act.

Not an unnecessary sound was made during the long hours of the night of June 16, 1775, and when dawn came intrenchments six feet high along the side of the hill were disclosed. In the face of the fire from the enemy ships and by the battery on Copp's Hill the Americans kept steadily at work com-pleting their intrenchments and, when there was a slight show of faltering aft

when the British troops supported by a terrific bom-bardment from Bunker Hill Monuthe ships in the harbor, advanced in solid column against the fortifications. Confidently they approached the works of the Americans, construing the silence on the hilltop as timidity. They changed their attitude on this point when they arrived within a few hundred feet of the redoubt. The Americans had been silent, but they had been ordered to refrain from firing until the command was given. Thus it was the British, advancing over the open stretch of ground, panting from the heat and the weight of their knapsacks, heard the word "Fire!" at the moment of their supreme confidence, and recoiled before a volley that mowed down many of British Line Decimated.

A deadly fire was poured into the British columns, the marksmen of the Americans picking off the officers. Along the whole line of fortifications, from the rail fence to the redoubt, the British troops were soon in retreat. The British columns advanced a second time and once more were met with deadly fire. Now, however, they were prepared for it; although staggered by the shock, they soon rallied and con-tinued their advance. The Americans fired with such rapidity that it seemed as if a continuous stream of fire poured out from t h e redoubt. Bravely the British struggled to place in front of their enemy's position, but were forced to give up the attempt, and fled precipitately

Although the field was strewn with their dead, the British again , attempted to take General Warren's the American po-Monument. sition. Prescott had sent for re-enforcements early in the day, and John Stark, with his New Hampshire company, had courageously crossed Charlestown Neck under a se vere fire from the enemy. But the hazard of the attempt deterred other commanders from bringing troops to the support of the brave Prescott. With ammunition almost exhausted and troops tired out from the strain to which they had been subjected, Pres cott realized the futility of holding his position in the face of repeated attacks by the reformed and re-enforced British lines. Nevertheless he determined again to measure his strength with the adversary; and, with a command to his men to make every shot tell, he awaited the advance of the British. Again the latter were per mitted to advance within twenty yards of the American works before they were fired upon. The British line was broken, but still it advanced. With their powder now quite exhausted, the Americans met their opponents with clubbed muskets and bayonets.

The odds were too great and Prescott ordered his men to retreat. It was in doing this that the Americans suffered their heaviest loss; among others who fell was Warren, one of the most cherished of the popular leaders.
