FROM FRANCE AT THE FRONT

Interesting Time

October 8, 1918. Somewhere in France

My dear wife,

It has been some time since I wrote, but the shells and bullets have been flying so thick I haven't had time for anything. Am fine and dandy, got through without a scratch so far. We drove them back about 15 miles and then we go, relieved a few days ago. They have had them on the go ever since I tell you it is pretty exciting when the shells are falling all around you and the air full of shrapnel.

One place we captured they had their meal on to cook and had to leave it. They had a couple big pots of vegetables on and they were still hot. There was a big pile of cabbage all ready to put on.

We sure captured a bunch of prisoners. It was nothing to see a couple of hundred going by. In one little town we captured we found a couple men chained to a machine gun.

We were working between the artillery and the infantry, making roads and bridges for the artillery. We were in the artillery fire most all of the time.

I am swapper for one of the wagons and in charge of the tools.

We were camped in one place for two or three days and we skinned dug us holes in the bank of a road a couple feet deep to sleep in. When we weren't busy and they began shelling us, we would run get into those and feel just like they were made of steel.

The Germans have dug-outs all over the country that they have been living in ever since the war started. By the way they look I don't think they thought we could ever capture it. For they had little gardens around the dug-outs and some places they were raising rabbits. But the Yanks slipped up on them a bit.

The first few shells that hit around around the boys they hollered 'Raspberry' at them, but when they came thicker they began cussing them.

You spoke about Howard. No, I haven't seen him. He was some where with us but I don't know where.

Well honey, have got to pack up for we are going to move. So

My dear folks,
I have finally arrived at the place where I have longed to be for some time. I am well as ever (to last page)
