Good Teeth---

Good Health

An eminent authority once said that at least three-fourths of the people have decayed teeth.

While the cavity in a tooth is small it is usually a simple and nearly always a painless procedure to fill it. However when a tooth is permitted to decay until the nerve is exposed or nearly exposed it usually becomes very much more sensitive than normal, owing to the fact that the nerve has been exposed to hot and cold fluids in the mouth which act as irritants. After the nerve has been uncovered by decay it usually dies accompanied with more or less pain, infection follows, with the usual abscess and may finally result in the loss of the tooth.

Don't wait until pain drives you to the dentist.

Dr. H. C. Dake, Maupin, Dentiistry.
