ORCHARD GLEANINGS

WIRE PROTECTOR FOR TREES

Rabbits, Field Mice and Other Rodents Destroy Bark During Fall and Winter.

Orchard trees and especially the young ones should be protected against rabbits, field mice and other rodents that destroy the bark during the fall and winter. The most effective time for this work is during November. Field mice can be kept from damaging the trees by mounding earth around the base of each tree, says Orange Judd Farmer. The mounds should be about 15 inches across and cover the trunk for a height of 8 inches. All weeds and dead grass should be raked away from the base of the trees. Mounding is not effective against rabbits, but complete protection can be secured by the use of cylinders of galvanized iron wire screen. A piece of 3/4-inch-mesh wire 12 by 24 inches makes a convenient size protector for small trees. In order to form the cylinders the edges of the wire must be fastened together as shown in the illustration, or by overlapping the edges and sewing them together with a fine wire. The cylinder should be imbedded in the ground 3 inches to prevent rodents from burrowing underneath.

LARGE SHIPMENT OF FRUITS

Peaches Surpassed Only by Apples, Oranges and Watermelons—Grapes Rank High.

Peaches lead all other short season tree fruits in the United States in the number of carloads shipped from producing regions annually, according to figures collected by the bureau of markets of the United States Department of Agriculture. Considering all fruits, peaches rank fourth in car lots sent to market, being surpassed only by the long season fruits—apples and oranges—and by watermelons. The approximate yearly average number of cars of the four fruits mentioned reaching market during the past four years are: Apples, 67,000; oranges, 35,000; watermelons, 29,000; peaches, 25,000.

The only close competitors of peaches on the markets of the United States are grapes, of which about 22,000 carloads were shipped annually, and cantaloupes, the annual shipments of which were approximately 17,000 cars. The carloads of strawberries and pears shipped were slightly less than half those of peaches. An average of approximately 7,000 carloads of grapefruit and 3,000 cars of plums and prunes combined were shipped annually for the past four years.

The combined peach shipments of Georgia and California are as great as those of all other states combined.

ORCHARDS AND FRUIT YARDS

Best Time to Feed is in Winter When Ground is Frozen—Most Berries Are Hardy.

Orchards and fruit patches are best fed during the winter when the ground is frozen, for this covering is good to prevent soil heaving, and the fertility is being washed down into the soil ready for use early in the spring.

Most of the berries are hardy without protection in winter so far as cold is concerned, but the light mulch will keep the soil moist and prevent frost from loosening the roots. When putting the mulch on strawberries make it thin or it will smother the plants.

Barnyard manure with plenty of dung is the best fertilizer for fruits, but bonemeal and wood ashes can be used with it to advantage, as the manure is deficient in these elements.

PACKING APPLES IN BARRELS

Retailers Are Strongly Opposed to Policy of Overfacing—Favor One-Fourth Inch Size.

The aim should be to improve the pack, for we are now overfacing the barrel. Most commission dealers believe the face should show slightly better than the average in color, but retailers are strongly against the policy of overfacing. Because they are faced honestly, certain well-known brands sell for more than other packs of the same quality because they are overfaced, writes C. S. Wilson in Farm and Home. Opinions differ somewhat, whether to make one pack of all apples of 2 1/4 inches and up, or whether to pack in one-fourth inch sizes. Almost without exception the retailers favor one-fourth inch sizes, because so many apples are sold by weight.
