Harriet Beecher Stowe

The Beechers came to America in 1638 and were leaders in the New Haven colony. The father of the little girl, Harriet, preached earnest sermons on the munificent salary of a hundred dollars a month. The mother, a beautiful and gifted woman, opened a school, though she had eight children of her own to care for.

Harriet had a remarkable memory. She read all the books she could find; altho' most of her father's library was sermons and church pamphlets. You can imagine her delight when she discovered The Arabian Nights at the bottom of these books.

The oldest sister, Catherine, had opened a school for girls at Hartford, and twelve-year-old Harriet went there first as a pupil, then as a teacher. Indeed she was for a time both, and very busy days she had.

Her father had been preaching for six years in Boston and was now offered the presidency of Lane Seminary, to be opened in Cincinnati. The whole family made the toilsome adventurous journey across the Allegheny mountains by stage-coach to what was then considered the far West.

In 1833 she married Calvin Stowe a professor in the Seminary. They were from wealthy, at times even poor. Though she had a large family of children and often a few boarders, Harriet wrote many short essays. Her first check was used to buy a feather bed.

Outwardly, her life in Ohio was orderly and quiet, but every month occurred something stirring, fierce debates of slavery; Houses of colored people were attacked and burned; the story of an abolitionist was riddled; free negroes were kidnapped; The Beecher family slept with weapons at hand, ready to defend the seminary.

It was impossible to live in Cincinnati and not be personally affected. Servants were hard to

Sunday evening Don Stogsdill found a large eagle in one of his traps. Mr. Stogsdill went to lock after his traps set for covotes, and not finding two traps or the post on which they had been attached, nor any sign of them having been sprung and dragged away by an animal, he went down into the Deschutes Canyon, where the eagle had flown with its heavy encumbrance and become entangled in underbrush. The bird measured 6 feet 6 in. from tip to tip.
