Ralpha and the "Stop" Sign

By MYRTA A. LITTLE

This story is going to be about a girl and a rallroad—and a few other

Raipha Thomas-the girl through school, and home in Brenton, living on the sleepy, beautiful street with colonial houses on both sides, had been wishing for two things with a venge-

The things hadn't come, but the Eastern Branch railroad had, suddenly. It had also bought and paid for its right to cross Brenton's aristocratic thoroughfare, staid old families notwithstanding, and in so doing had incidentally and quite unconsciously tled itself up with Ralpha Thomas' two wishes.

First, Ralpha wanted something to happen, anything 'most, from a balloon ascension to a new kind of cereal; and second. Ralpha wanted to prove somehow that she could do something besides eat, sleep, look pretty, and play lady for her doting father and mother. So, she went hunting, found something interesting unusually interesting-made plans, and put them up to her father, with results as follows:

"It's preposterous! A Brenton Thomas doing such a thing! Why, it's worse than your last threat to act for moving pictures!" said father, his fingers meeting precisely over patched of fact, however, Ralpha didn't appear knees. Ralpha plumped herself on the to be hurt, and she did appear might-

"It's not fair to lose all the fun on earth because you're a Brenton Thomas, dad," she pleaded.

"Have you spoken to your mother

"Mother said it was a joke, and I'd soon get over it. She said nobody but men-er-tended rallroad crossings, anyway. I won't get over it, though. Henry Jones, the crossing man, can't Ralpha wouldn't-" -work-any longer, men are scarce -and-"

"Here I have looked forward to your marriage to some prosperous-let us say, writer, and now you're daring to think of being a-crossing tender! to 5 ton GMC, Republics, Whites, etc. groaned the squire.

"Exactly!" beamed Ralpha. crossing tender. Sit in the dinky little crossing house by the bot little stove. Then when the train whistles, dash out and hold up the sign with 'Stop'

"Stop!" said Squire Thomas.

"Exactly," said Ralpha, "Stop every-thing that's likely to get in the train's way. It isn't as if there were lots of trains, either, I'd be on duty at seven, off at seven at night. Time off at noon, Nice salary. Bigger later, maybe, if—well, if—" Ralpha had the grace to blush, though at the time her father did not know why she blushed.

Father tried another tack. "You do not consider the lives that would be in your hands, Ralpha. You are flippant. You'd have to do more than listen for whistles. What that young Jones put such notions into your head

"Henry Jones is all right!" said Raipha Thomas, emphatically,

"What did he leave his crossing job for, then? Good job-for him! What dld he come to Brenton for in the first place? Where did he come from." AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS Ferm Implements—New and second hand, special prices. P. E. Esbenshade, 360-366 E. Morrison St. East 91.

Ralpha evaded the question. "Oh, please, dad," she pleaded. "Let mejust try.'

"No, Ralpha, no!"

But, being Ralpha, she did, of course. In fact, in a couple of days Squire Thomas found himself telling two of his friends that daughter thought it would be an interesting experiment, the authorities considered her dependable, a godsend as it were, and so-on and on. So all Brenton was converted, thought it was a jolly idea, liked to see the bright-haired girl holding the black and white "Stop," at the little crossing, and called at the little gray house and told her so. Raipha was happy as a June day. The signals were mugic things, the green and red and white lights that pricked the darkness, the round flare of the engine like a great sunburst out of nowhere, the tapering threads of track, the puffs of smoke and steam with the sunlight playing on them, the shrieks of the whistle, the big healthy rumble and roar, the hurrying folks, waving their hands, maybe from hundreds of passing windows Oh, it was great! It got into Ralpha's blood, just the way it had been intended that it should. And, at the very start, the man appeared. He had a brand new office in the city five miles from Brenton, and a home in the country, three miles north. He drove a brave, trusty car that slid through the snow like a friendly bob, and from the day Ralpha took up her new work, he always waited at that Brenton crossing, in the morning for the up accommoda tion to plod by, and in the evening for the down accommodation. Naturally, he talked with Ralpha, while she held the "Stop" sign, and afterwards, Gradually they made astonishing plans, as name was Norton. He was large. dark, rich, had fascinating business connections, and was obviously interested in Ralpha Thomas. He brought cover. It wasn't all she did. Among things were happening, all right.

"Good work," said the station not about Norton's plans, but about labor.

the way Ralpha tended the crossing Fine you got permission for thisother business, too!"

"Sh-h!" warned Ralpha, "Mum! It's awfully good of the railroad, of course, but think of the boost It'll be for Brenton. And I'm not neglecting my crossing."

The test-day came. It was after noon, one minute before schedule time for the 5:16 express. It always passed the down accommodation at Brenton or between Brenton and the first station down the line. It would pass at Brenton tonight. Ralpha was ready for it standing erect, alert, the black "STOP" held firmly in her hands, a new tingle in her fingertips.

Up to the street chugged the brave and trusty car that meant that Norton was, as usual, on time to wait for the down accommodation. Down the street, riding his white horse was Henry Jones. Ralpha stood straight and small, "Stop," held high above her head. The express shricked at the first curve. Jones' horse reared, the brakes on Norton's car evidently refused to work. It was just as if all the perverse fates on earth were gathering right there round that brave "STOP," to see to it that Ralpha's wish came true, and something-happened.

Something did! After it happened, presto. Squire Thomas himself descended on the scene. From the corner grocery he had been watching his daughter and Norton and the down accommodation more closely than anybody knew Now he was right on hand, kicking the pieces of Norton's car out of the way, so he could get to Ralpha, and snatching her out of several men's arms with worthy vim, As a matter lly-surprised, to say the least.

"O, dad, whatever did you have to turn up now for?" she groaned. "It's all Norton's fault," glowered father, meaning the accident. "I jumped," said Norton cheerfully. "Not a scratch."

"Worse luck!" raved father. "That Jones chap's to blame, then, If he'd stuck to his job in the first place,

"I've stuck, all right," said Henry "You bet. But we'll have to do this thing over again anyway, Squire. Just a test, for lights and things. Greatest thing ever. Aristocratic old town, railroad crossing main street, pretty girl crossing tender, all full of love for the railroad, Dandy night pictures we've gottrain coming, Ralpha standing there, you bet! Tried crossing stunt myself, y'know, at first, so I could write my synopsis better. Norton here, director, new corporation in the city. This'll make a five reel, with all the other stuff we've-

Suddenly the Squire noticed a men acing click click from near by. "What's that?" he demanded.

"Moving picture machine, of course. Camera man's still at it. Thinks we can use this for the real thing I guess. Been looking long time for an aristocratic father, Squire Thomas, You wouldn't-Oh, but, Ralpha said you wanted her to marry a prosperous writer. Great little actress she is. Hasn't she worked! Five year con-tract signed. Salary raised twice. You wouldn't mind being my fatherin-law sometime-in a picture and in

-real life-"
"STOP!" thundered the Squire, but nobody seemed to hear him,

NATURE KIND TO OLD MAMMY

Tessie Explains Why She Has No Need to Waste Her Substance on Milliners.

Tessle is the fashlonable washerwoman par excellence. There was a time when she used to be a regularold Southern mammy, but now she's so stylish she never wears the same hat for more than a week.

Tessle dotes on them, talks about them all day long while washing and sundering the family's linen, and sometimes wears them when hanging out the wash on the roof.

But just how Tessie managed to wear so many different hats became a mystery. Her salary would never permit such extravagance. None of the hats was a "hand me down" or made over. So there was nothing else to do but to put the question up to

"Where do I buy mah hats?" she repeated. "Why, I don't buy 'em; natchur gives 'em to me."

When Tessie was accused of spoofing she explained how nature sheu its generosity upon her. Tessie, seems, seeks windy neighborhoods.

"Las' week," said Tessle, "I got that velour tam when it was blown off'n a woman ridin' on the L. This here beaver sailor came a-rollin' down Third avenue in that win'storm the other day. But mah best gift from natchur was plown off'n Riverside drive fire escape. It was a red and orange turban with a emerald hatpin in it."-New York Sun.

Auto Wheelbarrows Auto wheelbarrows, designed by a contracting firm, are really miniature dumping trucks with a new arrange ment of their parts. The machine dehad also been intended. The man's scribed in Popular Mechanics Magazine, is built on a light truck chassis, with the driver's seat at the rear, back of the wheels. The engine is placed between the front and rear wheels, books to read. Ralpha was and the hopper is in front of the enthrilled; read them from cover to gine, directly over the front wheels. The dumping mechanism is operated other things she signed a contract. Oh, by means of a lever. These machines have a much greater capacity than the ordinary wheelbarrow and have agent to Raipha, after the first month proved economical of both time and of the east, and to some in Europe.
