Code of Ethics

The is no profession from the members of which greater purity of character and a higher standard or moral excellence are required than the funeral director, and to attain such eminence is a duty every funeral director owes to his profession and to the public. It is due to the latter, as without it he cannot command respect and confidence, and to both because no scientific attainments can compensate for the want of correct moral principles. It is incumbent upon the members of the profession to be sober at all times and temperate in all things.

The nature of calling takes us to the inner circles of families that are afflicted. Secrecy and delicacy, when required by peculiar circumstances, should be strictly observed, and this obligation are hauling lumber from Mul- extends beyond the period of the professional services.
