Safe Paints

From the days of the Pyramids to the present is a long period of time, yet, in those days as at present, paints were used for beautifying and preserving the objects which they covered. In the old days paint was used as a decorative material for the mummy cases. Today it is used to conserve the natural and converted resources of the country.

Painting one's buildings is not an expense. It is an investment. It absolutely insures against depreciation and rotting. It is the only form of insurance that can be guaranteed to perform its duty 100 per cent.

Paints have been high during the last few years but are now down to normal basis. It would seem to be economy to paint now. The Dutch have an old proverb which says "Good paint costs nothing, for it saves more than it costs."

There are many brands of paint on the market and to the consumer all paints look alike. It is only when the paint has been applied to a building for four or five years that the quality is demonstrated. It is to late to regret ones action of a poor choice of paint. It is well to buy the advertised lines. While we are not mentioning any brand in particular, a perusal of our advertisements will indicate the leaning of the editorial chair.

Harpham Camp Bed

When G. L. Harpham assisted by A. C. Moad some six years ago constructed a rude pattern of a folding bed to furnish the U. S. patent office for a sample he had a dream of a popular outing equipment superior to any former output. This is realized today in the stock now on sale of which Shattuck Bros. are local distributors. The bed is manufactured for quantity distribution by an outing merchandise concern in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, with several distributing points in the east.

The present product is so constructed that there are no loose parts, is easily set up without tools with no chance springs to slip. It is the lightest and easiest set up of any auto metal spring bed made and can be put on running board or tonneau of any car. The established retail price is $15.
