Ditch Appeals

The first of the White river water right adjudication appeals will be heard in the circuit court tomorrow, in the case of Frank M. Driver, who is petitioning for right to intervene.

This will be the start of water cases which will occupy the circuit court at more or less regular intervals during all of 1923. There are eight exceptions in the White river adjudication, and following the settlement of these, will come cases growing out of the Mill creek, Fifteen Mile creek and Eight Mile creek adjudication.

These exceptions are directly the outgrowth of the decisions of the state water board in its adjudication of water rights along the creeks in question. Persons dissatisfied with the amount of water allotted to them by the state board, have the right to appeal to the circuit court, and from then on the procedure is identical with that of any other civil case, with the exception of the taking of testimony, which already has been done by water board representatives.

The following is the circuit court docket of cases in the White river adjudication:

January 19, petition of Frank M. Driver for right to intervene; January 23, exceptions of W. J. Knox; January 25, exceptions of the Rock Creek and Gate Creek Ditch companies, and also the exceptions of the Three Mile Ditch company; January 29, exceptions of the Wamic Water Ditch company; February 6, exceptions of the Round Prairie Water Ditch company; February 27, exceptions of the Lost and Boulder Ditch company; March 29, exceptions of the Tygh Valley High Line ditch company.

Due to the importance of the questions involved, the court has stipulated that written briefs will be required at the time of the oral arguments in the respective hearings.—Chronicle 18.
