BARBERS IN THE BIBLICAL TIMES

Occupation Specifically Mentioned and Otherwise Referred to in Pages of Scripture.

The word barber is only once mentioned in the Scriptures, namely, in Ezekiel 5:1, which reads: "And thou, son of man, take thee a sharp knife, take thee a barber's razor, and cause it to pass upon thine head and upon thy beard."

Although barbers are not often expressly mentioned, yet from the constant mention of shaving and the incident of Delilah sending for a man to shave Samson, there can be no doubt that his class existed among the ancients. The Hebrews were particularly careful of their heads and beards, and all seem to have applied the razor except the Nazirites, who were untouched by it from their birth. The Egyptian barbers were called khak or shavers, and they are represented at work in a tomb of Beni-Hassan, of the Twelfth dynasty, holding their razors in the hand, which have a short cylindrical handle, with a broad, flat blade of bronze on a line with the axis of the handle.

Added Things.

Prosperity, enjoyment, happiness, comfort, peace, whatever be the name by which we designate that state in which life is to our own selves pleasant and delightful, as long as they are sought or prized as things essential, so far they have a tendency to disenoble our nature, and are a sign that we are still in servitude to selfishness. Only when they lie outside us, as ornaments merely to be worn or laid aside as God pleases—only then may such things be possessed with impunity.—Froude.

Mahomet's Wise Words.

Every good act is charity. A man's true wealth hereafter is the good that he does in this world to his fellow.—Mahomet.

The Sacrifice They Made

By MARION A. CHILSON
(©, 1923, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

It was dusk when Doris Royce dropped her book into her lap and gazed steadfastly across the water. Her thoughts went back to the day when she, with little Dick, had left home in bitter anger and had taken refuge here, in answer to Cousin Beth's invitation to spend a few weeks with her at her cottage on Lake Fairview. The quarrel had been over a trifling matter, but of the whole episode one utterance stood out clearly, the answer her husband had given to her hysterical statement that he no longer loved her.

"Love, real love, is gained only by sacrifice," were the words that repeated themselves over and over in the girl's troubled brain and puzzled her strangely.

Another thing troubled Doris. Little Dick had always been his father's constant companion, and in his estimation no one else was quite so great as daddy. The two idolized each other, and now that they were separated the little fellow begged constantly for his father. It hurt Doris to refuse him, since he was not very well and never had been during his short life of four years. Often something within her whispered for the boy's sake, if none other, to forgive and forget. But in the end her pride always conquered.

Although the days at Fairview were full of young people, gayety and fun, they passed slowly for Doris. Something was lacking, and she, knowing where this something was and that her happiness depended upon it, could not reach out and grasp it, although it lay just beyond her reach.

Two weeks passed when, one afternoon, Doris, with the same heavy heart, put little Dick to sleep in his crib and then lay down herself. She awoke about two hours later and arose quickly, as she had slept longer than she had intended. Glancing toward the crib, she was astonished to see that it was empty. Rushing downstairs, she gave a hurried survey of the rooms. Her face went white as she noticed that the screen door was unfastened. Beth had forgotten it before going to her rooms.

A quick thought came to her. Twice before little Dick had started to find his daddy. Sudden panic seized her as she noticed black thunder clouds gathering. Hastily she awoke Beth and together they made a more careful search. Beth telephoned to the neighboring cottages, but nothing had been seen of the runaway. Meanwhile the thunder rumbled and the storm drew closer.

Men from all around gathered and the little party began their search. Doris, wrapped in a raincoat like the men, went with them, as nothing could persuade her to remain at home. Her face was deathly white and her eyes were like coals, but with the others she pushed onward. The storm broke with torrents of rain, vivid lightning and crashes of thunder. Still the search continued. Doris trembled, but clung close to Beth and could not be forced to turn back. It was late when the storm let up and the moon broke through the black clouds. Slowly Doris became her own calm self, but the fear and pain in her heart were almost unbearable.

Midnight passed and they had almost decided to give up the search when Doris heard a slight noise and some way managed to slip away from the others unnoticed. Her heart gave a leap as she spied, a short distance ahead of her, a man half standing, holding a little figure in his arms. They were in the shadow of a large tree and the man's back was towards her, so that she could not see his face. As she approached them she bent over the little face.

"Oh, Dickie," she faltered. "Oh, darling! Is—he—hurt?" She asked this of the man, who had now risen to his feet.

Before he could speak, Dickie threw out his little arms. "Mother," the little voice was soft and unsteady; "mother, I've found my daddy." The baby eyes closed, and he snuggled closer to the man's breast.

"My Doris, could you ever forgive me?" The man put out his arms and drew her to him.

"Oh, Jack, you don't know how I've wanted you!"

"Not any more than I've wanted you, my little girl," he whispered, as he kissed her quivering lips.

It was nearly morning when, at last, Dickie lay in his little bed, while the doctor said one word, "pneumonia," and shook his head doubtfully.

It was during these hours, while Dickie slept, that Jack Royce found a minute to explain. Finding life at home a torture without his wife and child, he had hired a cottage and, with a friend, had gone there for their vacation without the least knowledge of his wife's whereabouts. Upon the preceding afternoon, while walking alone, he had taken shelter from the storm in a cave. A few minutes before Doris found him holding the boy, he had heard a cry, and going out, had found Dickie in a wet, rumpled little bundle.

All of that night, the one following Dickie's rescue, Doris and Jack knelt side by side at the little white crib. It seemed to the two breaking hearts that all that they held most dear, most sacred, seemed slowly slipping away with each tiny breath that came from the white, still body. It was only occasionally that Dickie opened his big blue eyes, but seeing his father and mother, he closed them happily. Only once did he venture to speak, and then his voice was so weak that it frightened the listeners.

"Daddy, you will always stay with mother and me, won't you?"

"Yes, darling, I'll never go away again." Jack slipped his arm under the little fellow while Doris smoothed a little hand and smothered back a sob.

The end came about one. "Daddy," he whispered faintly, and then, fainter still, "mother." Jack crushed the little body against himself. Doris looked away for one long moment, and when she looked into the crib the little body once more lay white and still.

Two weeks later a white-faced woman and a grave, silent man sat alone in the moonlight. Their souls were full of grief, but they were young, and when you are young life is sweet, even though touched with sorrow or with bitterness.

The girl was the first to break the silence. "Jack, dear, long ago you said that real love was gained only by sacrifice. I didn't know what you meant then. I am just beginning to understand. You meant, dear, that we should give up, or be willing to give up, things we loved—be willing to sacrifice anything, or do anything for the other. But, Jack, we have now; we have sacrificed the one we loved best. We have sacrificed our darling for each other. Don't you see, dear? You didn't give him up for me, nor did I give him up for you, but we both gave him up for each other."

"Yes, Doris, and when you make such a big sacrifice, the biggest possible, the love ought to be the same, dear—the biggest, the best, also."

In the moonlight Doris' eyes slowly filled with tears. But behind them there was a new light, a light of glory, sweetness, love and the beauty of life. Jack drew her tight into his arms, and his lips touched her dusky hair, then they both looked away into the darkness to where little Dick slept.

And although he was no longer with them, his memory was dear, and his spirit seemed to be ever near, all about them, softening their sorrow and helping to increase the new love that he had created.

INDIAN UPRISING PUT DOWN

Notable Battle Between Aborigines and Spaniards Recorded in History of Durango, Mexico.

The name of the little settlement of Tepehuantes, in Durango, Mexico, recalls one of the earliest events in Durango's recorded history, a bulletin of the National Geographic society remarks. It was the tribe which gave the name to the village which, with the Tarahumares, arose against the Spanish settlers four years before Plymouth colony was founded. In that year some 25,000 Indians of these two tribes marched on Durango city. They killed missionaries and burned down churches as they moved. Not more than 600 white people withstood this siege, and even allowing for an exaggeration in their estimate of 15,000 of their enemy killed, the white man's victory was a terrible lesson to their assailants.

These tribes had a beverage, tesvino, peculiar to them—a beer, of milk and water hue—made from maize corn and grass seed.

The descendants of these Indians retain symbols introduced by early missionaries, but little of Christianity. When they worship pagan gods before a Christian cross they pour out libations of tesvino. They feed it to infants along with their mother's milk to ward off sickness. They use it as a liniment, and take it internally for every ill. They employ it at orgies with no thought of debauchery, for such orgies are part of their worship.

"Wild Spirit" Advances Illumination.

Man's eternal search for riches and the futile endeavors of alchemists to change the baser metals into gold, led to the accidental discovery of artificial gas.

John Baptist van Helmont of Brussels studied and practiced medicine, and later turned to chemistry and research work in the Seventeenth century. In the course of his experiments with fuels in 1600 he discovered that they yielded what he described as "a wild spirit." He found that this "spirit" could be produced by means of combustion, fermentation and the action of acids on limestone.

So phantom-like and elusive was Van Helmont's discovery that he named it after "geist," the old German word for spirit. It was nearly 200 years after Van Helmont's discovery that practical steps were taken to harness this elusive spirit.

A Commuter's Record.

"Did you attend the funeral of our late friend, Sam Biffels?"

"Yes. The preacher delivered an eloquent eulogy over Sam's remains, praising his qualities as a husband, a father and a citizen, but he failed to mention an achievement Sam bragged about more than anything else he ever did."

"What was that?"

"He commuted for twenty years and never missed the eight o'clock train to town."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Why Millionaires Keep Busy.

"Are you thinking of retiring from business?"

"The idea hadn't occurred to me," said Mr. Grabcohn.

"You have more money than you will ever be able to spend."

"What keeps me plugging away is the sad realization that there is more money in the world than I will ever be able to get."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF.

Salem.

The old people's home, erected here recently by the Methodist church at a cost of approximately $50,000, was opened Sunday. The building is of brick construction, contains 38 rooms and is modern in every particular. Although conducted by the Methodist church, the home is open to aged women of all denominations.

Astoria.

The county court will open bids on Saturday, April 14, for paving about one mile of the market road, beginning at the end of the present pavement in the Olney cut-off and extending toward Young's river falls, and for paving approximately five miles of the main Nehalem highway, starting from the Olney cut-off.

Salem.

The Oregon public service commission Saturday received from the Central Pacific Railroad company a copy of an application filed with the interstate commerce commission in which permission is asked to construct the Natron cut-off. The proposed new railroad will extend from Kirk to Oakridge, a distance of approximately 108 miles.

Sheridan.

Lattice-work fence built around unsightly places on Bridge street by the Civic Improvement club will be used to trellis Boston ivy, Virginia creeper, clematis and honeysuckle to beautify further these spots. Last Tuesday afternoon the vines were planted. The aid of the business men and shovels have been enlisted by the women.

Gold Hill.

E. W. Lillegran, Medford mining engineer, has invented a condenser for the quicksilver furnaces in the Gold Hill district to recover the quicksilver from the refractory cinnabar ores and the by-products from the deadly fumes. The inventor has recently patented his invention and it is being demonstrated in the quicksilver mines of this region.

Salem.

The Peoples' Power league proposed constitutional amendment providing for occupational representative government in Oregon, will go before the voters of the state at the general election in November, 1924. This was announced by W. S. U'Ren of Portland, who spent Saturday in Salem conferring with Governor Pierce and other state officials.

St. Helens.

With the departure of the steamer Point Judith for San Pedro Sunday, lumber shipments for the week from St. Helens amounted to about 5,500,000 feet, the heaviest of any week during March, and bringing the total shipments for the month up to close to 19,000,000 feet, most of the lumber being destined for San Pedro and southern California ports.

Salem.

Reports received at the offices of the Oregon public service commission here during the last few days indicate that the shippers of the state soon will face one of the most serious car shortages experienced in this state for many years. Members of the public service commission have sent letters to the car distributing points of the east, urging that Oregon receive its full share of carriers during the heavy shipping season this year.
