Stock Comes Far to Pacific International

The Pacific International Live Stock Exposition is held in Portland, Or., but it is "true to name." Livestock of the best herds comes from all parts of the continent to fight out the last battle for supremacy in its show ring. Animals that win the purple ribbons at the Pacific International are as good as the best anywhere.

The lower panel of the picture shows the Thorp string of Jerseys from California. They will be at the Exposition in Portland November 3 to 10 to see if they are as good as the Jerseys of Oregon, Washington, Idaho and elsewhere. They have good Jerseys in California, but they will meet the best of the West at Portland.

The insert above shows three very typy Shorthorns that are coming to our exposition. They are owned by H. C. Lookabaugh of Oklahoma. They will help make up a wonderful string, but they will have to look their prettiest and beefiest if they win against the other Shorthorn herds to be shown this year.

Judges, without exception, will be men of national experience, and great ability. The judging alone is worth a trip to see and hear.

There is no livestock show held anywhere in America that surpasses that of the Pacific International. And the best of it is that it is near.
