Apples and Carrots

By JANE OSBORN

Clive Rumball, vigorous, well-built young man of twenty-eight, was ruddy of cheek and bright of eye in spite of his hours indoors as junior member of the law firm of Smith & Jenkins Now he was spending three weeks of his late summer vacation at the home of his uncle, Samuel Todd, by whom he had been reared-a man whom nothing would induce to desert his farming estate in the country for more than a few days at a time.

"What do you say to taking in the state fair tomorrow?" asked the uncle over their leisurely breakfast on Sunday. "I've arranged for my usual exhibits—apples and potatoes and so forth. I'd like you to go along." Clive Rumball's ruddy cheeks grew perceptibly ruddler. He was well aware of the fact that the state fair was booked for the following week on grounds just outside the state capital in the next county. The roads and village streets in the surrounding country had been so placarded with notices of the fair that only a blind man could have remained in ignorance of the fact that it was to take place and that it was to "eclipse all previous state fairs in magnitude and splendor.

BRAZING. WELDING & CULTURG. "I'd like to go with you, uncle," began Clive, rather feebly. "But, of course, I can't say I take much interest in that sort of thing. I-" Frankly Clive lonthed state fairs, and he had good reason to do so.

"It's a little different in your case," interrupted the uncie. "Fact is, I'd be disappointed if you didn't go. You see, I am sending up an exhibit of the Clive Rumball apples, quite a lot finer than anything else we've ever been able to produce—larger and redder and juicier. They are of all odds the finest apples of their class. The uncle dld not heed the look of protest and entreaty on his nephew's face. He smiled reminiscently.

"Yes, it was just about twenty-three years ago when I first perfected that apple, and you'd just come to live with us. I'd been working hard trying to get the right strain, and I'll tell you I'd come pretty near being discouraged more than once. You were a pretty little boy with round, red cheeks. I looked at the apple and I looked at you, and it come over me in a flash. That apple would have to be called the Clive Rumball. I didn't know," added the uncle with the embarrassment of pride, "that it was going to be one of the most famous apples in the world. I didn't know that it was going to, as it were, make the name of Clive Rum-ball famous.' Clive Rumball himself had heard this story often enough before and he had endured for many years the embarrassing consciousness of bearing the name of one of the world's most famous varieties of apple. In school, until the boys had learned to know the strength of his arm, he had been known as "Apples," and frequently jesting allusions through college had been made to his ruddy apple cheeks. "I hope," said Clive, trying not to show the least suggestion of his annoyance, "I hope, uncle, that I may be able to make the name Clive Rumball known as something besides that of a red-faced apple."

"Hey!" said the uncle, who had never dreamed that the situation was embarrassing for his nephew and not quite understanding this protest. "Oh well. Don't worry about that. You'll never lack a reputation. People will always be glad to meet you, just to see what the little apple-faced boy looks like when he has grown to be s

If the name had been anything less usual than Clive and Rumball the task of becoming dissociated with a famous apple might have been less dif-If the world-famous apple had been the Thomas Smith he might have passed unpoticed as Tom Smith. But there was no getting around Clive Rumball. It meant an apple and noth ing but an apple to millions of farmers far and near, just as surely as Dan Tucker means a dance or Jenny Wren means a bird.

The following Monday the dutiful Clive Rumball drove over to the fair grounds near the state capital with Uncle Samuel Todd. Samuel Todd had made his small fortune as the conservative partner of a brokerage office, but his hobby had always been farming in general and apple raising in particular, and he never felt more at home than with a group of progressive farmers. "I want you to meet my nephew," sald Mr. Samuel Todd with a smile as he clapped a broad-paimed hand on the back of a white-bearded old farmer. "My nephew-Clive Rumball."

"That so!" exclaimed the farmer beaming at the nephew. "Wall, ef you're as sound as the Civic Rumball apple, you're all right." And he laughed long and loud at his own

The remark was only typical. Before Clive and his uncle had been on the fair grounds for a half hour Clive Rumball had been introduced at least ten times to as many farmers who all cracked some sort of joke about the famous apple which had been named

They had parked their car and were directing their steps toward the building where were exhibited various fruits and vegetables-along with a second second second new and improved Clive Rumball from

"There's my friend, Mr. Jennifer," said the uncle, pausing as he saw man alighting from a car in the park ing field. He was in agitated conersation with a young and animated woman, so Samuel Todd did not in-terrupt. Mr. Jennifer was apparently trying to get the young woman to alight and the young woman was re-sisting. Clive Rumball became somewhat interested. Though he caught but the locks that showed beneath her lit- all badly diseased. tle cloche were red-red like burnished copper. And Clive Rumball had a failing for red-haired girls.

Presently the farmer, Mr. Jennifer, got out alone, sighed deeply and the car turned while the girl at the wheel threw Mr. Jennifer a kiss.

Mr. Jennifer caught up with Clive and his uncle.

"Let me introduce you to my nephew, Clive Rumball," began the uncie, importantly pronouncing the name, but Mr. Jennifer was too preoccupled with his own affairs to hear the rest. He merely bowed to Clive and his uncle and said, "By heck!"

"That gal of mine," he went on. "She's all right, but she's stubborn. But, then, red-haired gals usually are. All I wanted was that she should get out and go around with me. I wanted to introduce her. But she had made up her mind she wouldn't. So she said she'd drive around and call back for me instead. I've got a mighty fine showing of carrots," he continued, ad-dressing Samuel Todd in particular. And Clive Rumball wandered along while the two agriculturists discussed apples and carrots. It was about then that Clive Rum ball summoned courage to slip his moorings. Suppose you and Mr. Jennifer look around awhile and I'll meet you later, say at the judging stand at about twelve."

It was agreed, and Clive Rumball, hoping that no one would recognize in him the godfather of the rosy-cheeked apple bearing his name, wandered back to the parking field. He strolled around it, wondering whether by chance he might find the red-haired daughter of Jennifer. He was still looking when a motor coming around the wrong direction honked violently

"Excuse me," said the driver, who proved to be no one in the world but Miss Jennifer. "You were with my father when he went off. Will you see him again?"

"I expect to," said Clive with a bow. "I expect to meet Mr. Jennifer and my uncle at twelve."

"Well, will you tell father, then," said the girl, "that I've gone. I told him I wouldn't come, and he knows 1 hate these fairs and why-and now I'm going. I don't know just where, only I'm not going to hang around this place. And that's that."

"I suppose it is," said Clive with a laugh. "In the meantime, why do you hate state fairs, Miss Jennifer?"

"Why shouldn't I?" threw back the ou, but not here. I've got to turn Hop in, and I'll set you down wherever you are going."

Clive got in beside the girl with red hair and, having explained that he was going nowhere in particular but that he had just drifted back toward his own car, they started out of the grounds and along a country turnpike.

"I hate state fairs," she explained, "because my name's Deborah Jennifer-" She paused to see if this brought a smile of recognition to the face of her companion. "You are apparently not a farmer," she went on. "If you were you would no doubt have red hair. You apparently don't know pole. that the Deborah Jennifer is the most celebrated variety of carrots in the country-maybe in the world, My father perfected it. He named it it sometimes not that I mind being red-haired, only I do mind the jokes that people crack when they know my name is Deborah Jennifer. Honestly, it is enough to make me want to ge married, just so I could be called by some other name." Then she adde quickly, "Only, of course, I don't intend to. I don't like men and I shap't ever be married."

"I should think," said Clive with a smile, "that that would be your best way out of it. Unfortunately my own name is Clive Rumball-"

He got no further. "Heavens," cried the girl. "Then you're an apple. And I suppose people kid you about being apple faced-only of course you aren't. No," added Miss Jennifer with a twinkle in her bright blue eye, "I couldn't think of marrying you even if you wanted me to.

All of which shows that red-haired girls are just as apt to change their minds as any one else, for before another summer had brought another fair every farmer's magazine throughout the country had published the pictures of Clive Rumball and his bride, Deborah Jennifer, under a heading to the effect that an apple had married a carrot.

Sure a Relief.

A little girl, on her first visit to the country, after gathering a lot of wild exclaimed: "Oh, mamma, how nice it is to live where somebody doesn't own everything."

If You Have A Cough Take this Advice

Salem, Oreg.—"Some years ago I was a farmer in Kansas. Thru exposure, serving as a soldier during the Civil War my health had become impaired. I was bothered with a chronic cough and catarrhal condition; I felt like an old man, although I was only forty. I heard of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It helped me so much that I continued taking it (I think about six bottles in all) and felt new pure blood coursing thru my body. The "Golden Medical Discovery" drove out the catarrh and also the cause of my cough. There are somethings we can forget, but when a person has received as much help as I did, it is impossible to forget it. I feel younger and more vigorous at 78 than I did at 40."—L. D. As soon as you commence to take this "Discovery" you begin to feel its bracing, appetizing effect. Buy it of your druggist, in tablets or liquid. Write Dr. Pierce, President Invalids' Hotel in Buffalo, N. Y., if you desire free medical advice.
