Nitrogen Wall Makes Sky Blue, Says Professor
London.—The long-accepted explanation of the blueness of the sky as being due to the well understood action of the sun's rays upon particles in the atmosphere is challenged, according to the Daily Mail's Copenhagen correspondent, by Professor Vigard, of Christiania university.
Professor Vigard claims a discovery suggesting that the atmosphere of the earth outside the air stratum is shut

The Italians breed turkeys by the thousands, but they are intended chiefly for export, very few being eaten in that country.

Wine Thirty Years Old
Troy, O.—Two gallons of wine, one of blackberry and another of grape, estimated to be about 30 years old, were found in an abandoned and all but forgotten cellar near the home of Justice Cyrus McCurdy by city water department employees. Justice McCurdy, a wheel-chair invalid, turned the find over to Sheriff Montgomery Spilman.

Peanut Flour.
Peanut flour is slightly superior to meat as a growth producer, experiments on rats indicate.

Shepherd's Harvest Time
At lambing time is the shepherd's harvest and no trouble should be spared at this season in getting the biggest percentage of living lambs, thriftily growing, and the mother's condition such as to keep the young families doing well from the jump. It may be a matter of deepest mystery to the beginner with sheep to go to his sheep lot some morning and find half a dozen new lambs, some large and others smaller, with apparently no mother to claim the most of them.

A GIRL AND A PRINCE

ONCE upon a time there was a peasant girl who was so beautiful that a prince fell in love with her. Every day he rode by the place where she was tending her father's goats and at last he told her who he was and asked her to become his wife.
"Oh, but I could never marry a prince," said the pretty girl, whose name was Nita. "And, besides, your family would never let you marry me."
"Then I will leave my father's palace and give up the kingdom and live with you," said the prince. "I shall marry no one but you."
"No, that would never do," said Nita. "You could not become the husband of a peasant girl any more than I could marry a prince. No, you are not good enough for me," she said, with a toss of her pretty head.
"You cannot plough a field or make a harness or take care of the goats and she won't marry me," replied the prince. "I am not good enough for her. She said so."

"Peasant girl indeed!" said the queen. "She would marry you soon enough if we should permit such a thing." Then, because she was a woman, the queen wanted to know what was lacking in her son that this girl did not think him good enough for her husband.
"She said that even though I had servants to do the work I ought to know how it should be done, that a good master must know how to rule his servants, and that I did not know anything at all," the prince replied.
"She has some sense," said the king. "That sounds sensible, and I should like to know why it is that you don't know how to do something! A son of mine ought to be able to do anything. You don't take after my family or you would be able to plow a field."
"Indeed!" answered the queen, growing angry. "If he took after my family he would be able to do everything. It is yours, sire, he resembles, and not mine. Can you make a harness, son, or not?"
"Of course I can't," replied the prince. "I don't know how to do anything. No one has ever taught me. I am not good enough to be the husband of the peasant girl."
"It did not take the prince long to learn, and one day he proudly showed to the king and queen a harness he had made, and then one day he asked them to look at a field he had plowed.
"We will find the peasant girl now," said the queen, who had not forgotten she had spurned her son for a husband.
"We will show her our son can do anything her people can do."
So they found Nita and showed her the harness and the field the prince had plowed, and the praise which Nita gave the prince for his work quite won the hearts of the king and queen.
When they found that their son was ready to give up the kingdom to marry Nita, the king said that the kingdom needed people with good sense to rule it, and now that his son had become such a good and sensible man, all that was needed was a princess quite as sensible, and he for one gave his consent to the marriage.
The king, not to be outdone, gave hers, and that night the merry-making in honor of the wedding of the prince and the peasant girl made the welkin ring.

"You Are Not Good Enough for Me."
or milk the cows. No, you won't do for my husband and I won't do for you as a wife, so good-by."
Nita did not give the poor prince any time to reply. She ran off toward her home so fast over the rough stones he could not follow, and home he went, a very sad prince indeed.
"What is the matter with you?" asked his father that night as the prince, with hanging head, refused to eat his supper.
"I am wishing I were good enough to marry Nita," replied the sad prince.
"Nita!" exclaimed the king and the queen, who had never heard of the peasant girl.
"Who is the world is Nita?" asked the queen.
"She is a peasant girl and she knows how to take care of goats and I don't,

The Why of Superstitions
By H. IRDING KING

FALLING OUT OF BED
RECENT discussion of Loretta suggests Lulu as an interesting parallel study. Lulu is also the result of modern spelling. Its correct form is Loulou, a version which originated, and is still a favorite in France.
Its popularity is attributed to the Provencal Lora de Sades, beloved of Petrarch, whose story is considered one of the world's greatest romances. She is the lady whose praises are sung by the great Italian poet in his "Rime" or sonnets. She is identified with Lora de Noves, an Avignonese lady who died of the plague in 1348, and who was already married to Hughes de Sades in 1327 when Petrarch is said to have first seen her.
The romantic nature of the French caused the name of the lovely heroine to find extraordinary vogue in that country. However, Lora or Laura is scarcely euphonious to French ears, and she became Laura, and finally Loulou.
Jet is Lulu's talismanic stone. It is the symbol of sorrow, but according to an old superstition, it will protect its wearer from sorrow, since it has an almost unique power among gems of becoming a part of the very body and soul if guarded with jealous care. Friday is Lulu's lucky day and 4 her lucky number.

Wrigley's Spearmint THE PERFECT GUM MINT LEAF FLAVOR

Solarian to be Shipped.

Vancouver, Wash.—G. W. Minkler, inventor of the solarian, an instrument that he believes will revolutionize the study of the earth's movements, received a letter from Oberlin college, Ohio, asking him to ship his model as soon as possible and inclosing a check to cover costs of getting out a pamphlet describing the solarian.

Mr. Minkler studied the earth movement for years and worked out his invention in less than a month. After several attempts to form a company to manufacture the instrument he decided to turn his patent rights over to Oberlin college with the understanding that the solarian is to be manufactured in sufficient quantities to supply the demand. The instrument will be moderately priced and should be in every high school and college where an earth globe is used, Mr. Minkler stated.

Mr. Minkler was a student at Oberlin college from 1860 to 1868 and was a member of the Lincoln Widewakes, who worked to elect Lincoln president. He is 73 years old and has lived in Vancouver for 25 years. The solarian model will be shipped next week, he said.

If You're a Young Woman or Even in Middle Life Here Is Some Good Advice For You

Salem, Ore.—"While bringing up my family I depended upon Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription to keep up my strength. It was especially beneficial to me during the trying months of expectancy, relieving me of nausea and quieting my nerves, and I do believe that I would not have come thru the critical time of life so easily and comfortably as I did had it not been for Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I have given the 'Prescription' to my daughters also when they had need of a special tonic and nerve and they have always been benefited and strengthened by its use. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is truly a woman's medicine that I take pleasure in recommending."—Mrs. Fred Dewitz, 625 N. Capitol St.
